Psychic Cayce's Legacy On 67th Street Draws People To Learn More About Life; And Life Beyond

By Karen Dalrymple
Staff Writer

We all have psychic abilities. Or so the late Edgar Cayce said. Proof that Cayce had an unusual gift can be found at the Association for Research and Enlightenment, Inc., but that doesn't mean we all have the ability to explain the unexplained.

According to Joe Dunn, who handles the public information at A.R.E. at 67th Street and Atlantic Avenue, Cayce once said that we are all capable of developing our own psychic abilities. The A.R.E., founded in 1931, is "devoted to the research and study of more than 14,000 readings given by the late Edgar Cayce," Dunn said.

As a child, Cayce discovered that he could very quickly mentally understand things. Then, as an adult, Cayce began having throat difficulties, making it hard for him to speak. While under hypnosis, Cayce prescribed a method for curing the throat disease.

"It then became apparent that he did have an unusual ability," Dunn said.

Cayce then began diagnosing medical problems and prescribing cures for the various conditions.

"He would give a reading. He never knew what he said until he woke up and someone told him," said Dunn. "He had tapped into a vast storehouse of information."

Cayce died in 1945, but his personal secretary Gladys Davis Turner, recorded his 14,000-plus readings and saved copies to be filed. The readings located at A.R.E. are used to preserve, study, and do research on and are made available to the public.

The readings have been put under topics and placed in circulating files. Any of the 90,000 members of A.R.E. may call or write and request any circulating file from the

North Beach Creative Center Offers Unusual Art Classes For Children And Adults; Owner Happy About Successful Studio

By Karen Dalrymple
Staff Writer

It's new and it's unusual.

The recently opened North Beach Creative Center, snuggled downstairs at the Mayflower Hotel on 34th Street, is offering strange arts and crafts for children, as well as adults.

Nan Szary, owner and director of the studio and a certified art education teacher, was previously teaching about 30 kids in her own home. It was then that she decided she needed to expand.

"I decided there isn't that much at the beach for children," she said.

For pre-schoolers, Szary is offering a "Wild Things" program, where children will create and learn about the literature of nature's wild things.

A "Make It And Take It" class will allow children to make framed pictures and take them home with them. Currently, a "Dinosaur" class, dealing with prehistoric times is being offered, as well as a "Spaceships and Stars" class.

"We're always going to be offering new things," Szary said.

Szary is also planning on conducting a design class around Easter, where children can make their own Easter baskets, and a cartooning class, which will be taught by cartoon illustrator Victor Marcos.

Szary is presently teaching all the classes herself, but volunteers Cheryl Collins and Tina Smith will be teaching the "Wild Things" and ceramic classes, respectively.

The studio will also be offering classes for adults, such as water-

Health Department Regulations Put Residents In A Dilemma

By Lee Cahill
City Council Reporter

Regulations of the Health Department intended to protect the health of residents have placed those same residents in a dilemma.

If they have failing septic tanks, which is definitely a health problem, and report them to the Health Department, they may lose their homes.

This causes them to keep silent as the situation deteriorates, while help may be available.

The problem involves, generally, older homes with older septic tanks installed prior to more strict regulations. The septic tanks are failing, but if the Health Department finds their property incapable of maintaining a septic system, the house may be condemned. The residents then lose not only their plumbing but their homes.

"If someone feels something is not working right but is afraid to say something, something is wrong with the system," said Councilwoman Barbara Henley at a council workshop. "I have a feeling we have a lot of failing septic tanks around."

Princess Anne County-Virginia Beach Historical Society Dedicated To Restoring The City's History

By Karen Dalrymple
Staff Writer

There's plenty of history behind the city of Virginia Beach and there's a group of citizens who really care about preserving some of the history that is still left.

The Princess Anne County-Virginia Beach Historical Society was officially founded in 1961 "to acquaint the people with the past heritage of Virginia Beach and Princess Anne County," said Florence Chandler, who is in charge of the society's public relations.

The society, which is a non-profit volunteer organization, is open to the public and meets semi-annually. The meetings feature guest speakers, some from surrounding cities, who talk about the area's history.

The society boasts some 500 members, many from as far away as California. The historical society's meetings are often held at "Upper Wolfnsare," an old house off Potters Road that "was saved from oblivion," according to Chandler. "We try to encourage people not to demolish the things that are left," she said.

She added that the city of Virginia Beach is currently conducting a survey of old buildings that are over 50 years old. The city then recommends to the society the buildings worth preserving.

"We want to protect, preserve and restore as much as possible," said Chandler.

Chandler said the society is in the Kings Grant's Ann Dearman Known As The Pirate Lady

By Karen Dalrymple
Staff Writer

Ann Dearman, director of education at the Life-Saving Museum of Virginia, said she's good with kids, "in a kooky sort of way." It's Dearman's experience as an elementary school teacher that prepared her for her job today.

"I wouldn't be doing this if I hadn't taught," she said. "It's a definite pre-requisite."

Dearman, a 22-year Kings Grant resident, began working with children straight out of college. The Peoria, Ill., native graduated in 1954 from Bradley University in Peoria and journeyed to California to pursue her teaching career. At the time, teachers were being recruited from the mid-west, so Dearman jumped at the chance.

"I taught in southern California for three years and married a handsome Naval officer," she said.

before moving to London, England.

Three years later, she arrived back in the states and took up residence in Virginia Beach, where she taught second grade at Windsor Woods Elementary School. For two years she was a "year round" teacher because children went to school all summer.

"It was found not to be all that satisfactory," Dearman said.

After teaching at Windsor Woods for 11 years, Dearman began performing volunteer work at the Maritime Historical Museum. Although she didn't know much about maritime history, Dearman said, "The more you learn, the more you want to know."

Dearman went from being a volunteer to director of education.

"Somehow or other I got into the education bit," she said.

Dearman is responsible for planning children's programs at the museum, which changed its name this past summer. Her duties include coordinating school tours, outreach programs to schools, programs for various events such as Harborfest, and the Adopt-a-School program. Dearman said many of the programs stress safe boating techniques, and the city's maritime history.

She said because of the popularity of Virginia Beach's waterfront property and boating, that "it's something that needs to be stressed. You can't start too early."

When she's not busy planning programs at the museum, Dearman researches pirates and conducts programs at Beach elementary schools. She mainly presents her programs to third graders because they study the history of Virginia Beach in their social studies classes. She holds most of her programs in the spring, usually two or three times a week. She said any more than that "gets to be too many."

"I'm fairly well known for that," Dearman said of her pirate programs. "I'm son of the 'Pirate Lady' of Virginia Beach."

Dearman said she has always been interested in history and especially in sharing it with young people. She said, remarkably, children are very interested in the city's history.

"The ocean is a fascinating thing. It's fascinating to tell a child about it and get them all geared up and excited," Dearman said.

When she's not at work, Dearman, 57, likes to knit, garden, cook, attend the theater, travel and go to the beach. She is active in the formation of a new South Hampton Roads Museum's Forum, which is an association of museums on the southside of Hampton Roads.

She said she plans to stay at the museum for the time being because she loves "meeting other people and the challenges of creating new programs."

She said there is nothing about her life she would like to change, including her occupation.

"I believe in it and I want to see what else can be done with it," she said of the museum.

Dearman, who calls herself a "fairly true Gemini," said she can be laid back one day and crazy the next.

Compu-Sketch System Is A Success

Do you ever wonder who draws the mugshots that go on the "WANTED" signs you see at grocery and convenience stores? Well, many of those award winning photographs are done by a computer!

The Police Department is getting more and more high-tech every day. In the past, police used an Ideniti-Kit to recreate the looks of a suspected felon. Now, all a witness has to do is answer a few questions and presto, there's the picture.

The good thing about the Compu-Sketch system is that it is probably more accurate than other systems and equipment in defining the details of a suspect's face. If the first picture is a little off, the computer can modify it until the picture is as close as possible to the real thing. With the Ideniti-Kit, the right questions may not be asked, therefore possibly causing the picture to be inaccurate.

Although not all investigative personnel are able to use the computer system yet, it seems to be a success. The more suspected felons who are caught by these sketches, the better. There are too many criminals on the loose as it is; Virginia Beach can't afford to have a faulty system. - K.L.D.

Historical Society Busy Restoring The City

It's so nice to know that there are people out there in the community who care about Virginia Beach's history and preservation. The Princess Anne County - Virginia Beach Historical Society has made sure that citizens are encouraged to hold on to old homes and buildings and not demolish them.

There are many homes in Virginia Beach that have not been trampled by developers. Unlike most historic homes, they have not yet been destroyed to make way for a shopping mall or a parking lot.

The historical society had a good idea when it mentioned establishing a historical area of the city. Old homes and buildings, as well as gravestones would be moved to this area, where they can be restored. That is one thing Virginia Beach is lacking, a historic section. A mini-colonial Williamsburg would be a definite tourist attraction and something residents could enjoy. Many people probably don't know all about the city's history.

More people should become involved in the restoration of our city's landmarks. Why tear them down and have just memories when the real thing could be preserved and kept alive. - K.L.D.

Art Classes Helps Kids To Be Creative

If you have a pre-school aged child and wonder what to do with him all day, your questions have been answered! Send him to art class.

A new arts and crafts center has opened at the beach and it is the perfect place for a child to be creative and interact with children his own age. Several unusual classes are being offered, such as "Spaceships and Stars," "Dinosaurs," and a "Wild Things" class. The children will be able to create their own art and take it home with them.

The classes usually last about an hour and are taught by a certified art education teacher. While your child is at art class, you've got just enough time to do the grocery shopping or get your hair done!

The classes are not offered only to pre-schoolers; children of any age may attend. In fact, the North Beach Creative Center is in the process of conducting classes for adults. Watercolor, ceramic, and portraiture will soon be available for adults who wish to put their artistic abilities to use, or to even acquire some.

By sending children to art classes, they will learn to express themselves in many different ways. Parents, you may have a future Picasso on your hands. What better way to find out! - K.L.D.

A.R.E. May Confirm Psychic Ability Suspicions

Some people believe in it, some people don't. It's called psychic ability and if you venture to 67th Street at the beach, your doubts may subside.

The Association for Research and Enlightenment may be an interesting place to visit, especially if you're interested in other than normal, unexplained events. The buildings holds thousands of volumes on reincarnation, parapsychology and metaphysics. Also available for public interest are circulating files of readings done by the late Edgar Cayce, a well known psychic.

Sounds intriguing, doesn't it? The A.R.E. offers daily lectures on healing, personal destiny, reincarnation, dreams and experiencing psychic ability. A tour of the grounds where Edgar Cayce once lived and a movie on his unusual life are also available daily.

No, there are no psychics on staff at A.R.E., but it all takes is a glance through the yellow pages to find one. The staff at A.R.E. may be familiar with local psychics, but they don't make it a habit of recommending them to visitors.

It's amazing just how many people are involved in explaining the unexplained.

The A.R.E. boasts over 90,000 members from all over the country and no other parapsychic organization has a library of files and volumes like the A.R.E. does.

Edgar Cayce once said that we all have the ability to develop our own psychic powers. A trip to the A.R.E. may confirm any suspicions you may have about your unusual abilities. - K.L.D.

Elected Officials Suffer From Council Bashers

At a recent social gathering, the conversation and group activity turned to city council bashing, a cherished pastime here in Virginia Beach. After a period of wagging our tongues about council's sometimes comedic pronouncements, general disagreement with council's growth positions and questions about the motives of the various elected officials, we decided that all elected officials should be replaced. At that point we started to examine the qualifications of their replacements and arrived at a general consensus that went something like this:

None of us in the group were qualified because we all had to work for a living and didn't have the time to spare. None of us were cheap crooks or would take a bribe from a land developer. All of us were well-adjusted without ego problems and more importantly, none of us were born or raised around here and consequently not part of the political network here in our fair city.

I'm sure that similar results would be produced in almost any gathering, and that many of you readers may agree. But at the start of a new year let's take another look at our elected officials.

It does not seem unreasonable that one would disagree with council on any issue directly affecting the individual. After all, each of us is the best judge of what is good for them. But let's not confuse what's good for me as being good for the majority of the citizens and let's credit council with acting on behalf of the majority.

Let's also credit councilmembers with finding the time away from real jobs to work for us, and, until we convict one of profiling illegally from their elected position let's assume that they are reasonable and honest people with no real interest in ruining their reputations and lives.

And on the subject of reputations, how many of us would want our children or parents to read a steady stream of invective about our characters and abilities as an elected official. Perhaps we should issue councilmembers T-shirts with targets painted on them.

Comedic pronouncements are hard to avoid for anyone who speaks to the public or news media. But, perhaps some councilmembers should remain silent and be thought foolish rather than speak and remove all doubt. And, perhaps council should take notice of the community feelings and perceptions that make their defense necessary.

organization's library, which holds 50,000 to 60,000 volumes on religion, parapsychology and metaphysics.

"It's considered one of the most complex libraries of its kind in the country, if not the world," Dunn said. "The library is a little unusual."

The A.R.E. offers several programs for those who are interested in parapsychology or "other than normal events." Each summer, the organization holds week-long conferences attended by people from all over the country. This summer the scheduled conferences will focus on reincarnation; healing; personal destiny and discovering what one's purpose in life is; experiencing psychic ability; and dreams.

Currently, the A.R.E. is offering free lectures every afternoon. Depending on the subject, the lectures draw between 25 and 40 people daily. A half-hour movie on Cayce's life is available every day, as well as a tour of the grounds.

The A.R.E. is a non-profit organization which is run mostly on funds from membership dues. To become an associate member, the fee is $38 per year, a sponsoring membership is $48 per year and for a lifetime membership the cost is $1,000. To become a member, one must enroll in the organization and fill out an application.

"There's a constant influx of new people who come here," Dunn said.

Special Report

Delegate McClanay Reviews Legislative Actions

Glen McClanay

The Virginia Legislature recently completed its 1989 session.

Among the legislation that I successfully sponsored for the Virginia Beach community included the Virginia Credit Services Businesses Act. I sponsored this legislation jointly with our Attorney General Mary Sue Terry.

Credit services businesses are those that promise consumers that they will improve their credit and make it easier for them to borrow money for cars, household appliances, etc. Frequently, the consumer himself can correct outdated and incorrect items in their credit history, at little or no cost. Unfortunately these people frequently promise to work credit miracles, at a substantial cost to the consumer.

Key Features

The three key features of the bill are:

- A requirement that credit services businesses register with the office of consumer affairs.
- A requirement that credit services businesses post a bond for the protection of their customers.
- A provision to expand prosecutorial authority to include commonwealth's attorneys and county, city, and town attorneys.

The provisions in the bill are modeled after similar registration and bonding requirements in other states' credit repair legislation. The registration process permits the Office of Consumer Affairs to identify the key players in the business and see that the disclosures already required under existing law are in fact being made to the consumer. The bonding requirement should help to ensure that a claim by or on behalf of a consumer can in fact be paid.

Although the bill follows other states' examples, the procedures established under this bill track those which the Office of Consumer Affairs follows in administering the health spas act, among others. It should therefore be relatively easy for the office to assume this new regulatory authority.

Federal Impact Aid Threatened By Budget Cuts

Owen B. Pickett
U.S. Congressman

Each year, certain things are almost guaranteed to happen in Washington: snow brings the city to a grinding halt; the cherry blossoms never seem to bloom during the cherry blossom festival; and deep budget cuts threaten the federal Impact Aid program.

This year is no different, and although the city's weather and cherry blossoms are of little consequence to Hampton Roads, the federal Impact Aid program is. The public schools of Norfolk and Virginia Beach receive a combined total of some $12 million in Impact Aid funding each year, and almost half of that would be lost if Congress approves the FY 1990 budget proposed by President Bush.

Congress created the Impact Aid program shortly after World War II to compensate local governments whose real estate tax base had been reduced as a result of the federal government acquiring property for military bases and other uses. Many of these installations which are not subject to local property taxes also place additional demands on local governments for services. This is particularly true with military bases, which tend to swell enrollment in local schools.

To hold compensate for this, the Impact Aid program provides for payments to localities like Norfolk and Virginia Beach to help offset the loss of revenue and the added costs incurred in educating children whose families live or work on federal installations. This program has long been a substantial source of revenue for our local school systems.

The specific proposal contained in President Bush's 1990 budget would curtail the program by making Impact Aid payments based only on those children whose parents live and work on federal property. Our school districts now receive payments if a student's parents either live or work on a federal installation.

In each of the last two years, Congress turned back identical efforts to curtail the Impact Aid program. In doing so, we recognized that in order for federally-impacted school districts to maintain a quality education program, Impact Aid is essential. We must recognize this again by making Impact Aid a higher priority for the Education Department.

President Bush has frequently stated that he wants to be known as "the education President." I respect that goal and want very much to help him reach it. But this proposal to cut the Impact Aid program is plainly inconsistent with that goal, and the President should eliminate it from his 1990 budget.

City's Teamwork Is What Gets The Job Done

The Mayor's Report

Virginia Beach Mayor
The Honorable
Meyera Oberndorf

Once in a while, due to the frantic whirlwind of activity that accompanies my office, I find it necessary to close my door, sit back, take a deep breath and relax. I found just such a moment necessary this morning, between meetings.

While seated at my desk, I happened to pick up the city's brand new 1988 Annual Report hot off the press! (For those of you who wish to thumb through this impressive, 40-page full-color magazine, it will soon be made available through all area libraries.)

With every page I turned, I became more and more aware of just how far our city went last year, and of the monumental effort it took to get us there.

I looked up from my reading just long enough to take in the environment and listen to the sounds outside my office. City staff, from secretaries to the city clerk, from budget analysts to the city management team -- they were all involved... all rushing around, planning, making decisions, interacting, communicating! I happened to look back down at the magazine and immediately spotted the one word that said it all -- teamwork! There it was, right on the front page, amidst the city manager's message.

The sounds outside my office said it again -- teamwork! I glanced at my calendar and reviewed the week's upcoming meetings, the who, what, where, when and why. The message was vitally clear -- teamwork!

Mr. Watts, our city manager, hit it right on the head when he wrote, "We did it together!"

The average citizen probably doesn't give a great deal of thought to how things get done in this city. Too often human nature dictates that we focus on what's wrong rather than what's right. But according to the meetings I attend, there are hundreds, no, thousands of citizens who feel strongly enough about the quality of their community that they become involved in the decision-making process. And as a result, throughout the Annual Report, you'll see a whole lot of what's right with Virginia Beach! Mr. Aubrey Watts, our city manager, hit it right on the head when he wrote, "We did it together!"

And what did we do? How's this for starters. We initiated $115 million worth of highway construction; we opened the new $7.8 million, 95,000 sq. ft. central library. We built bridges, schools, and broke ground for a recreation center. We dedicated a massive community-effort project that now gives us our city's first local graduate center. Citizens approved, three to one, the Lake Gaston Water Supply Project (hond referendum) and the

Education Reform And Restructuring Discussed At BMIE Day

The VBEA Report

By Clair Polley,
President of the Virginia
Beach Education Association

On Thursday, Feb. 23, a truly special event took place in Virginia Beach -- BMIE Day. Business, Industry, Military and Education Day is a cooperative venture to promote a mutual understanding and appreciation between the business and military communities, and the public schools. It offers a better understanding of the roles of business industry and the military in the education of our young people. This event was organized by The Hampton Roads Chamber of Commerce, Virginia Beach division, education committee and the Virginia Beach City Public Schools. One hundred twenty-six teachers were given professional leave to visit business and discuss education reform and restructuring in addition to their conversations about their specific businesses and schools.

In addition to visiting the host businesses, the teachers, their hosts, and community leaders were privileged to hear Lt. Montel Williams speak during the afternoon portion of BMIE day. Lt. Williams who recently spoke to a gathering of executives of Fortune 500 companies in the White House, shared his vision of the resources it will take to help today's kids for tomorrow. Lt. Williams has spoken to over 50,000 kids since January 1988 imploring them to stay in school and get smart. He makes it clear that this country faces a real battle here at home making sure that every child is educated. He speaks about all children and makes it clear that our whole society has a crucial stake in making sure that the youth of today succeed in school. He reminds students, parents, teachers, business, civic leaders and taxpayers that they share a common interest in our public schools.

In a special Gallup poll commissioned by the National Education Association earlier this year, Americans ranked education the number one issue in this presidential election year -- an issue higher in importance than even drug abuse and the federal deficit. But translating this belief into action is difficult. The many groups that have a stake in public education need to pull together. In Virginia Beach we have a tremendous head start. BMIE day has been bringing educators and the business community together for six years. We may now have to look beyond this one day event and plan other activities which involve those who are concerned about quality public schools. Who should be involved? All of us!

The business community -- business understands that education is critical to community growth and economic well-being. Before moving into a Should Native Americans Take Oath Of Citizenship?

By Lillian Youell,
Virginia Beach Constitution
Celebration Commission
Consultant

In less than two weeks, approximately 100 petitioners will take the Oath of Citizenship. The Naturalization Court is their final step in the process of naturalization, but the acquisition of citizenship is also a commencement -- the beginning of a new life as an American citizen.

United States citizenship is a possession representing the dreams and struggles of many men through many centuries. The new citizen pledges his allegiance to the unity which is the strength of this nation, and accepts the responsibility that goes with the privilege of calling himself an American.

In addressing a group of newly naturalized citizens, President Woodrow Wilson once said, "You have taken an oath of allegiance to a great ideal, to a great body of principles, to a great hope of the human race... And while you bring all countries with you, you come with a purpose of leaving all other countries behind you -- bringing what is best of their spirit, but not looking over your shoulders and seeking to perpetuate what you intended to leave behind in them."

The Oath of Citizenship is not to the flag, nor to the government, nor the president, but to the Constitution. Similar oaths are required for military or public service. But no formal rite of citizenship has existed for rank and file Americans.

United States citizenship is a possession representing the dreams and struggles of many men through many centuries.

To bridge this longstanding gap, Warren E. Burger, chairman of the Bicentennial of the United States Constitution Commission, recently drafted a voluntary Citizen Oath after consultation with constitutional scholars, judges, lawyers and members of Congress.

Here is a way for all citizens to exercise patriotism and publicly support the Constitution. "I do solemnly swear that I will support and defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies, foreign and domestic; and that I will well and faithfully discharge my duties and responsibilities as a citizen of the United States."

Statements by naturalized citizens on what it meant to become an American citizen may be found in "Gateway to Citizenship," published by the U.S. Department of Justice, Immigration and Naturalization Service, 1943. Here are several comments which I found inspirational as well as challenging.

Lee Cahill's City Council Report

City Council Says No Smoking In Public Places

No one these days is about to say that smoking is not bad for you but some people just don't like having the government telling them what to do.

But after weighing the pros and cons city council decided to tell its citizens not to smoke in public places.

In adopting the no-smoking in public ordinance by a 10-1 vote (Councilwoman Reba McClanan dissented), council joined 41 states and a number of localities in Virginia, including adjoining Chesapeake and Norfolk.

Before adopting the ordinance, however, council deleted a section which would have regulated smoking in private offices not generally accessible to the public. In this respect the proposed ordinance, said Laura Zambardi, representing the tobacco industry, went too far.

But for others, the ordinance did not go far enough. Hilton Oliver, of 4856 Haywood Road, objected to the exemption of the ban for indoor walkways, such as the corridors in malls. He said that 104 stores are located at Pembroke Mall, but only 11 are accessible from outside. He said that with smoking banned in the stores, the concentration of smoke in the walkways will create a wall of smoke. Oliver said that he has an extremely serious allergy problem from smoke. He said his life has been made miserable from smoking and for seven years he has had to visit an allergist every week for shots. "I rarely go into a pharmacy or grocery store," he said, and felt strongly about the exemption of indoor walkways.

Another speaker (eight spoke on the ordinance), Michael Higgins, of Higgins Hardware, said that he saw some inequity in exempting bars and lounges while banning smoking in bingo halls, bowling alleys and skating rinks. Higgins opposed the ordinance, although, he said, he was a non-smoker. "I don't like (smoking) and I don't like the customers who smug (cigarettes) on my floor. But I like worse than that to have government telling me what I can and cannot do."

He said that the ordinance will entail a cost to employers and is unenforceable. He said the ordinance has too many exemptions, and that he will lose business. The ordinance, he said, is vague and ambiguous. "Where will Big Brother go next?"

Most of the speakers favored the ordinance which bans smoking in public places such as elevators, retail and service establishments, public restrooms, health care facilities, facilities, child-care facilities, indoor recreational areas, non-smoking areas of restaurants, vehicles owned or leased by the city, and generally areas open to the public. Non-smoking areas or rooms may be designated.

Marilyn Danner, of 2601 N. Landing Road said that she had no objection to people who want to smoke "so long as I don't have to breathe that smoke... The tobacco industry is fighting for survival; the majority of us who do not smoke are fighting for our survival."

The customer who smokes in an establishment would be guilty of the violation, Randy Blow, assistant city attorney said. He admitted that enforcement in private businesses would be difficult and that the city would have to depend on complaints: The Health Department will be the enforcing agency.

Property Owner's Assessment Increases 4.21 Percent

The average property owner in Virginia Beach receiving notices this week from the Real Estate Assessor's Office will find that his assessment has increased 4.21 percent during the past year.

While the increase in assessments is high, however, so is the rate of growth in the city.

Continuing a downward trend, since the peak year of 1986, in the total increase in the real estate values, Real Estate Assessor J.D. Banagan has projected for 1990 an increase of $922,644,894 for a total value of $15,086,986,916 or a percentage increase of 6.5.

While the rate of increase in Virginia Beach is still high, it's not as high as it used to be. The increase compares with a 9.1 percent increase in 1989 and a 16.4 percent increase in 1986.

At the 1990 real estate tax rate of .922 cents per $100 of assessed value, each penny of the rate will bring in $1,522,000 in revenue for a 6.3 percent increase in revenue.

Residential, apartment and agricultural properties comprise 79.8 percent of the tax bases with commercial and industrial properties constituting 20.2 percent.

Princess Anne Borough, where so much growth is taking place, experienced the greatest increase in assessments, 12.0 percent for a total assessment of $1.8 billion. Increases, however, reflect both growth and appreciation.

Kempville and Lynnhaven Boroughs, increasing 6.8 percent, had the highest land values, $4.4 billion and $4.7 billion with Bayside next with $2.6 billion, an increase of 5 percent.

Land use taxation kept the assessments in Blackwater and Pungo down. The Virginia Beach Borough shows the lowest increase in assessments, 3.9 percent for total assessment of $1.1 billion. Banagan said that the commercial properties on Atlantic and Pacific Avenues had already reached their appropriate assessments.

Road and Upton Drive, whose problem was revealed in connection with the improvement of Dam Neck Road came forward. They had already asked for city sewer, which surrounds them, and acquired the necessary 51 percent backing from the residents. They were placed on a list of 18 neighborhoods in line for sewer -- but the project is not included in the Capital Budget's five-year program.

They need sewer now, they told council. Their septic tanks are failing and the Health Department will not permit new septic tanks. But until a few weeks ago the city staff was not aware of the extent of the need.

Said City Manager Aubrey V. Watts, the people are in dire need, but instead of stopping other projects on the list, he suggested getting on with the project with the utility revenue bond process. "Had we known it was a severe health problem we would have moved it."

Watts promised council that before the next Capital Improvement Program is prepared the city will obtain information on the various projects and will look at the list with the Health Department to determine the needs. He said that this particular problem was aggravated by the highway program.

"I'm embarrassed," he said. The surveys are "not of the magnitude they should be." Much of the priorities were formed on the basis of complaints, he said, while more detailed site inspection should have been made. In reporting their problems, he said, the people had everything to lose and nothing to win.

Contel's "Choices" Program Informs P.A. Junior Students Of Education

Ninth graders at Princess Anne Junior High School recently heard about the importance of staying in school and what to anticipate in the "real world" after graduation, according to Kathy Ackaway, public relations specialist for Contel of Virginia.

Volunteer Contel employees presented the two-day seminar called "Choices."

"Choices" is a thought-provoking introduction to the realities of life after high school, Ackaway said. The program covers a wide range of topics including making decisions and learning about their consequences, time management, relating academic decisions to career consequences and the nature of the job market.

According to Ackaway, the company has a five-year commitment to bring "Choices" to as many ninth graders in their serving territory as possible.

"Many students don't realize the consequences of today's academic decisions," Ackaway said. "It's not that students lack the ability to learn -- they question the relevance of school. And it's a real shock when they apply for a job and have to take a basic math or English test."

Ackaway noted, in some companies, as many as 30 to 70 percent of the applicants for entry-level jobs fail simple math and basic skills tests.

An essential component of the program is that "Choices" is taught by a person from the business community rather than a teacher. "The students hear a real world message from a real world messenger," Ackaway said.

The program is designed for ninth graders because this academic year represents a transitional or "swing" year into the final push toward graduation.

The idea for "Choices" was developed by US West Foundation, a non-profit, non-endowed organization founded by US West, a Bell operating company.

The following Contel employees presented "Choices" to the students: Ackaway; Berkeley Gibbs, forecast analyst; Sterling Smith, local manager; Gene Lowery, construction coordinator; and Wade King, community relations representative.

Contel of Virginia, a telecommunications company in the state, provides service to more than 6,000 customers in Princess Anne and more than 330,000 customers statewide.

A native of Germany before naturalization, Robert F. Wagner said, "Only in a democracy has it been possible for those many races and creeds to live and work in peace, and contribute their full measure toward the common goal of national greatness."

Major Alexander de Seversky, whose native land was the U.S.S.R., said, "The strength of our nation lies in its diversity of people; in the polymalous way that they have adjusted themselves to one another, into a perfect mosaic. That mosaic is cemented by mutual respect, mutual tolerance, a desire to recognize the virtues and talents of individuals without regard to their origins. But by the same token, the most vulnerable phase of American life is in that very mosaic. That is where we can be attacked - by driving a wedge between groups, by making artificial distinctions between first-generation and second-generation Americans, between native-born and naturalized. Those who raise such false issues are boring into the very foundations upon which our great nation is built."

To refresh your memory, following the Bolshevik Revolution, a large number of Russians fled to the United States. Of these, De Seversky had been educated at Russia's Imperial Naval Academy. After his naturalization in 1927, he founded his own aircraft manufacturing firm, which eventually became Republic Aviation. His fighter plane designs were among the most advanced of the 1930s, and one of his books, "Victory Through Air Power," published in 1942, was widely acclaimed.

Another Russian aircraft designer who arrived in the United States in 1919 was Igor Sikorsky. He too had been educated in a Naval College and had designed the first four engine aircraft in 1913 as well as one of the best bombers of World War I. When he left Russia, he left a huge personal fortune behind. The company he founded here later became a part of United Aircraft Corporation. His contribution was producing the first successful helicopter in 1939.

Leopold Stokowski, whose native land was Poland, said, "I have often felt that the foreign-born Americans who, like myself, deliberately chose the country where we would live and do our life work are more than natives of the New World. The very act of transferring our loyalties and destiny to this country demands a faith in its way of life which few native-born Americans are ever called upon to feel."

Perhaps the proposal of an individual Citizen Oath for native-born Americans is an idea whose time has come. If taken by young people as they attain legal age, it would call attention to their responsibilities as well as privileges of citizenship. Surely We the People, who are citizens merely by accident of birth, should be held to the same standards we require of our naturalized citizens.

Mayor's Report

city negotiated a (beach) sand replenishment program. We continued to improve our resort area, not just to "show off" to our visitors, but to offer beauty and pride in our city to our residents as well.

We supported culture, dedicated fine art sculptures and offered grants to community choral groups. We installed a patriotic Flag Square at our Municipal Center and celebrated the state's 200th anniversary of the ratification of the U.S. Constitution.

We began the year with a meeting on a holiday. Yes, on Jan. 1 your city council attended a special meeting at the old Princess Anne Courthouse, in honor of the city's 25th birthday.

Memorial Day was celebrated in patriotic style as several hundred residents and visitors stood together and watched eight different flags be hoisted to the tops of their new flag poles as we dedicated the Veterans Memorial.

Yes, great strides were made throughout the city in all areas, but all the achievements were made possible by one thing - teamwork.

Whether born from a single idea or a meeting of 100 people; or whether our successes are measured from years of planning and organizing, or initiated from a five minute telephone call, the results of it all have aggressively thrust the city of Virginia Beach, now 390,800 strong, into the pathway of the 21st century. We are well prepared. The cornerstones have been laid. Today's foundations will serve us well in days to come.

As I lay the new Annual Report back down on my desk, I realized that all through my 15-minute reverie, probably my only rest-stop for the day, the hub-bub outside my office had never stopped.

What a healthy sound. Motivated, interested, aware people, staff and citizens alike, all scurrying about in their united efforts to make our community stronger, better, safer. Mr. Watts was indeed correct in his message to our community: it was teamwork!

"We are going to pick up with the adults," said Szczy, who taught for three years at the Adult Learning Center.

The price of the classes, usually held once a week for four to six weeks, will range from $15 to $46. Most of the supplies are available at the studio, but Szczy said she's starting to send home a list of supplies needed with each child.

Szczy said she tries to keep her children's classes down to about one hour. Once a parent drops their child off, Szczy said she always wants to see the parent first. When classes are over, the parents must pick their children up at the door.

There are currently 25 people attending classes at the creative center. Szczy said she likes to keep the classes small, with about 10 members in each, so each student can receive special attention.

Szczy is confident that her studio will be a success. She said children need to be more creative and have fun while they are doing it. Students will receive a certificate at the end of each class, as proof that they participated in the program.

"I think the kids will really enjoy it," Szczy said.

Szczy said her main goal is "getting people to experience different kinds of art classes."

"I think starting in April we'll be going crazy down here," she said. "We're hoping by April to be open morning to night."

Annual Telethon Benefits Easter Seals

The 18th annual Easter Seal Telethon will kick off on Saturday, March 4 at 11:30 p.m. on WAVY TV-10. The telethon will be broadcast live for 16 hours, continuing until 8 p.m. on Sunday, March 5.

Headlining the cast from Hollywood will be Pat Boone, marking his ninth consecutive year as the Easter Seal Host, and Mary Frann, from the Bob Newhart Show.

Hampton Roads Easter Seal Society Regional Director Linda Dyer and former Hampton Roads newscaster Charlie Hartig, now owner of East Coast Motion, a cable station in Nags Head, will be the hosts of all the local telethon segments.

Gene Walters, owner of Gene Walters Marketplace stores, is the chairman of the telethon for the second consecutive year.

Proceeds from the telethon will go directly to benefit the wide array of medical, social and educational services Easter Seals provides for disabled people, young and old.

Easter Seals is the oldest and largest non-profit voluntary organization. By the support of the community, Easter Seals can make a great difference in the lives of disabled people, by helping them become more independent and productive members of society.

In the past year the Easter Seal Center has served over 7,000 people in the Hampton Roads area. Ninety-eight percent of all funds generated by fund raising and contributions remains in the Tidewater area to benefit the disabled people in its community.

Each year more than one million people receive Easter Seal services from approximately 200 service centers throughout the United States.

A.R.E. is also funded by its week-long conferences; one day winter conferences held all over the United States; and by donations and contributions.

Dunn added that there are no psychics on staff at A.R.E., and that the organization does not recommend them to those who are seeking the advice of a psychic.

"The organization itself doesn't get involved in that. It's not an organizational effort or endeavor," he said.

The A.R.E. is presently being run by Cayce's grandson Charles Thomas Cayce, who reportedly has no psychic ability. Dunn said Cayce's older son Hugh Lynn, who died in the early 1980s, "had some heightened sensitivity," but didn't have the ability that his father had.

"It is safe to say that there's a respect for the information in the readings by the people who work here," said Dunn, who added that 85% of Cayce's readings that were verified, were accurate.

community any serious business leader will "check out" the local school system. Businesses today are increasingly demanding graduates with technical skills and problem solving ability to think analytically.

Public officials - elected officials want to raise school standards to gain a competitive edge in today's high-tech economy. Communities vying for new business and industry understand that the availability of good schools and skilled labor attracts new business and provides jobs. These men and women want the best schools for their constituents at an affordable tax base.

Parents - parents want their children to get the best education possible - an education that will prepare their children for college or the job market. Parents need to get involved and must work with teachers and administrators to assure that the education community is doing its best. But all the parents must be involved and we need to find ways that allow them to do so.

Teachers - like all workers, teachers want a liveable wage and decent working conditions. But teachers also understand that these conditions are integrally linked to improving the quality of public education. The same problems that frustrate teachers as employees also undermine quality education. Class size, an issue dear to teachers, is a prime example. The school board showed courage in raising the budget to lower class size in the second grade. The budget needs backing.

Taxpayers - parents and teachers are taxpayers. But even those without children in school have a vested interest in public education. When schools prepare students to become productive members of society, all citizens benefit. When we help students to master skills, develop positive self-concepts, and meet high standards - when we assure equity address the needs of the children at risk, and decrease failure rates - we are taking out an insurance policy against far costlier social ills. Poll after poll has shown that a majority of taxpayers are willing to invest the resources necessary to achieve educational excellence.

Students - students have the biggest investment of all at stake in education. The schools of today prepare the students for the jobs of tomorrow. They must equip students to make intelligent decisions demanded of a free citizenry by a democratic society. Schools must prepare students for the future intellectually, socially, emotionally and physically.

We all have a stake in public education. As Lt. Williams said, "With an education you cannot be denied." His message speaks to us all and we must now all work for public education. BMIE Day offered a tremendous opportunity to talk and learn and listen. Now we have to act!

"third world" America. Note: Most of the tax burden and the proposed new measures to get ourselves out of the "red" falls upon the people who fall through the net. Not so much the poor (they have nothing), not so much the rich (they have the power and money to survive) but to the middle class.

We pay full expense for hospitals, doctors, prescriptions, glasses, dental work, etc. We don't qualify for Medicaid, only Medicare. Our Medicare is going to have a surtax. Call it what you will. It is a tax on middle income Medicare recipients. The poor do not have to pay and the rich do not have to worry about the money. It is a very unfair method of "taxation" of a few for the benefit of a wide group.

Soon the middle income people will not be able to cope with all these "wonderful new benefits" and will eventually not be able to pay them and will fall into the poorer class who can get some help. Many of our middle income people have become the "homeless" who can't afford to pay for health costs, food, clothing and the high rentals. If our form of taxation keeps going in the same direction as it has been going then we will have two classes of people. The rich and the poor, the powerful and the meek and an in-group and the out-group. Let's all hope that the new administration will move in the right direction to help all people in all categories.

Compu-Sketch

Before the compu-sketch program was installed at the police department, an Identikit was used to recreate the face of a suspected felon. The kit consisted of a box full of clear plastic overlays and a grease pencil, which was used by most investigative personnel, Gray said.

"It was a good tool for its time but it's not state-of-the-art," he said.

Not all investigators are qualified to use the compu-sketch system, although Gray said the department is in the process of training most of them to use it. The program comes with an instruction manual which takes practice to perfect.

"It's not that difficult to pick up on your own," Gray said. "We don't want to rely on just two or three people to draw sketches."

Gray said the sketches are done, on an average, once or twice a week. But once the detectives get more involved with the system, more sketches will be made.

He added that the whole sketching process takes about 40 minutes and that the batch of questions asked has benefits that the Identikit did not have. He said when the kit was used there was always a possibility that an officer may forget to ask the witness certain questions. The questions on the computer system, on the other hand, tend to force the witness to reflect back on what they saw at the time the crime was being committed.

"We've had real good luck with them," he said. "I'm getting the system in place to insure that I get results."

Gray said, while investigating a robbery case, he took a sketch of a suspected felon to a bar where he was soon identified. In another instance, Gray said he had a case solved before the sketch was even completed.

"It's a good system. I like it!" he said.

the history of the city's seven boroughs. The series will be presented over the next two years on Sunday afternoons. The first program, on the history of Pungo, will be held Sunday, March 12 at 2 p.m. at the Charity United Methodist Church.

Guest speakers at the program will be Councilwoman Barbara M. Henley, Louis Culpeper, director of the Department of Agriculture and Stephen Mansfield, society historian.

City Cleared 800 To 900 Lane Miles; Using 950 Tons Of Salt

By Karen Dalrymple
Staff Writer

They called it the Blizzard of 1989, but according to city and state officials who braved the treacherous conditions, the Blizzard of 1980 was much worse.

"The worse was the Blizzard of 1980," said Vasilios Hadjiyiassmi, the city's assistant highway administrator. "But this one ranks high up."

Dennis Gribok, resident engineer with the Virginia Department of Transportation agreed, saying "I'd have to rate the 1980 storm worse."

Lewis Thurston, public affairs officer for the Virginia Beach Police Department said as far as emergencies went, it was "nothing we couldn't handle." During the Blizzard of 1980, the Marine Reserve Unit Armoured Personnel Carriers had to be called in for help.

Both the city and the state highway divisions worked around the clock to try and clear the expressway and the secondary roads in Virginia Beach. Using 37 snow plows, motor graders and spreaders, equipment with blades on the bottom used to spread the snow, the city cleared 850 to 900 lane miles, according to Hadjiyiassmi.

"Whatever was needed we put on the streets," he said.

Gribok said VDOT utilized its 18 trucks, plows and spreaders and nired additional front end loaders and graders to clear the 8.6 inches of snow that reportedly fell.

Virginia Beach used 950 tons of salt over the course of the blizzard weekend, half of that was mixed with abrasives such as calcium and sand. Using a non-processed type of salt mixed with the sand, the city cleared the priority one and two roads within the city limits first.

"If we had time we'd venture beyond those and touch the other streets," Hadjiyiassmi said.

The state highway division also used a 30 percent salt and 70 percent sand mixture, at $30 per ton of salt and $9.50 per ton of sand. During the blizzard, the state paid $27,300 in material fees and $36,200 for men and equipment. The first snow storm of the season, which occurred the week before the blizzard, cost the state $58,300 for manpower, equipment and materi-

Light Rail Transit Project Vetoed By Just One Vote

By Lee Cahill
City Council Reporter

"...For posterity's sake we must put together a mass transit system," urged Councilman Harold Heischberger. But posterity took a back seat as the light rail project between Norfolk and Virginia Beach was defeated by one vote.

The denial by a 6-5 vote of a resolution to continue the project ended five years of planning by the Tidewater Transportation District Commission. Councilwoman Barbara Henley, when asked if she was surprised over the vote, said that she was "disappointed." Henley, who, with Vice Mayor Robert Fentress represents the city on the District Commission, was the most vocal supporter of the light rail. She has said that the city needs to look at mass transit to reduce the impact on the highways and to afford lower-income citizens some means of transportation other than expensive car ownership.

Opposition at a recent council session was based on the lack of a link to the Naval Base in the first phase and the preferability of a monorail system that would be more flexible. Also the opposition said that the system would force a change in the city's land use plan, that too few people would be served to relieve the road needs and that Norfolk would reap greater advantages from the system than Virginia Beach although the two cities would share equally in the local cost.

The resolution would have the city pledge $500,000 or one half of

Continued Obstacles Delay Completion Of Gaston Project

By Lee Cahill
City Council Reporter

A moratorium on all new water connections in Virginia Beach seems certain, but not before the fall of the year, because of continued obstacles delaying the completion of the Lake Gaston project beyond the early 1990s.

The latest stumbling block was the refusal of the Brunswick County Board of Supervisors to allow Virginia Beach to construct the project through that county. This action, said City Manager Aubrey V. Watts, Jr., in a letter to council dated Feb. 1, could delay the project up to four years or more.

In response to the city manager's letter, Public Utilities Director Clarence Warnstaff presented a preliminary report on the "serious nature of the water supply situation in South Hampton Roads and in Virginia Beach."

As valid today as it was in a June 1987 report on "Short-Term Water

A Typical Virginia Beach Junior High School Serves 4,320 Pounds Of Fries And 3,400 Slices Of Pizza Monthly; 500 Cafeteria Workers Citywide Work Hard To Ensure The Food's Quality

By Karen Dalrymple
Staff Writer

They prepare 4,320 pounds of french fries, 3,400 slices of pizza, 12,500 chicken patties and 2,600 hamburgers a month, and that's just a small portion of the food that passes through the hands of Virginia Beach public school's cafeteria workers at a typical junior high school.

Each of the 64 public schools in Virginia Beach has its own cafeteria manager. Her day usually starts at 6:30 a.m., when she turns on the ovens and stoves and begins food preparations such as making potato salad and rolls. Soon after, the rest of the cafeteria staff arrives, hairnets on and hands washed, ready to cook for an average 950 to 1,050 hungry students per school. The staff doesn't leave until later on in the afternoon.

Sechrist said that 60 to 65 percent of the 67,000 students attending public schools participate in the school lunch program.

"They're on their feet from the minute they arrive until the minute they leave," Joan Sechrist, the city's food services nutrition training coordinator, said of the cafeteria workers, totaling 500 citywide.

The staff stays busy complying with the National School Lunch Program, which requires each school to offer the four major components: a meat or a meat alternative, bread or a bread alternative, fruit and/or vegetable and milk. The schools operate with a $2 million budget.

Music In Motion Dance Company Planning Annual Performance This Saturday At The Pavilion

"It's a major, major commitment," said Darlene Kelly, one of the company's artistic directors. "They have to do a really good balancing act."

The dance company consists of advanced dance students ranging in age from 10 to adult. Kelly added that the younger dancers are not quite full members; they're called

Chef Of The Year Tom Evaldi Is Cooking Up A Storm At Gus'

By Karen Dalrymple
Staff Writer

After struggling through high school, Tom Evaldi had no desire to go to college. When he picked up a pamphlet on a culinary vocational school, he decided he wanted to cook.

Evaldi, now a certified executive chef at Gus' Mariner Restaurant on 57th Street, said he always enjoyed cooking, even as a child. Born in Buffalo, N.Y., Evaldi and his family moved to St. Petersburg, Fla., when he was nine years old. A few months after graduating from Northeast High School, he enrolled in a two year culinary arts program.

"That was pretty much where I got started in the food business. It took off right away," the Pembroke Meadows resident said.

He received his associate occupational science degree and began working at a local Italian restaurant. After two years, Evaldi said, he got "burnt out," so he decided to take a course in bartending.

He then spent two years at Trader Vic's, a Polynesian restaurant chain based out of San Francisco, Calif. He then transferred from St. Petersburg to Atlanta, Ga., to "help open the Trader Vic's in the Atlanta Hilton."

"I got a little homesick there," he said.

Four months later, Evaldi went back to Florida to work as a cook at a country club. He said the other chefs at the club were his age, but seemed to know more about the restaurant business. His co-workers then talked Evaldi into attending the Culinary Institute of America (CIA) in Hyde Park, N.Y.

He graduated from CIA in 1979, after two years of training. The school, which Evaldi said had about 2,000 students then and 40 to 50 executive chefs on staff, "is a massive place."

"We learned both the front of the house work and the back of the house," he said.

Evaldi's roommate at CIA, Gordon Christy, now owner of Grand Affairs, was married in Virginia Beach in 1979. Evaldi came for the wedding and ended up meeting a wife of his own and taking up residence.

His first job in Virginia Beach was as a waiter at the Lynnhaven Fish House. He then left the Fish House to work as a chef at the Quarter Deck on Shore Drive. When he realized he wasn't happy at the Quarter Deck, Evaldi went back to the Fish House to work in the kitchen. He soon took over the chef's job.

In January of 1982, Evaldi and a friend left the Lynnhaven Fish House and began renovating The Happy Clam, located at the Ramada Inn on 57th Street and the oceanfront. The new restaurant was called Gus' Fish House. Evaldi said he was half-owner for about four years, and when his partner left, "I sold my stock to the hotel. We needed to run it as one company. I'm much happier this way," he said.

No More Snowstorms This Winter

The Virginia Beach community has already had two snow storms this winter. Could there possibly be room for another? Let's hope not.

The first real storm of the season occurred about three weeks ago when approximately 14 inches of snow fell on Virginia Beach. It was a fun snow, the kind you can make great snowmen with, and, it came and went with no problems.

Everyone was excited about the snowfall, the kids missed a day of school, and some even headed for Mount Trashmore with their skis. But then it melted and the city went back to normal.

Normal, that is, until late Thursday night when a blizzard was making its way back to the beach. This time it was worse, but not as bad as the dreaded blizzard of 1980. Schools were cancelled, businesses shut down, and residents were advised not to go outside. Grocery stores were packed with people trying to stock up on necessities and people were filling up all the family cars with gas, just in case.

Not that much snow fell, about nine inches, but conditions that came with it were worse than any amount of snow. The roads were a sheet of ice and because of the high winds, snow drifts made the snow more unbearable. This wasn't a fun snow; it was too cold to go outside and the snow wasn't sticking all that well.

Most of the city spent the whole day Friday in front of the television listening for any changes in the weather conditions. Then Saturday rolled around and, although the roads were still semi-icy, the temperature had dropped a little. Those who were brave enough to drive did so, and hopefully drove very slow.

By Sunday, the roads were fine and the snow had begun to melt. So much for the blizzard of '89. Let's hope blizzard number three isn't waiting in the wings. Enough is enough for one winter. - K.L.D.

School Lunches Deserve No Criticism

Kids are always complaining about the cafeteria food at school, when actually they don't know how lucky they are. Where else can you find a well balanced meal and the choice of several desserts for under $1?

Students at Virginia Beach public schools have their choice of meat or a meat alternative, bread or a bread alternative, and a fruit and/or vegetable every day. In junior and senior high schools, students are able to purchase a salad plate, a hot entrée or a sandwich from the sandwich line. They have everything there is to offer right in their own cafeteria. What more could they ask for?

There are probably many parents in the community who worry that their child isn't eating a balanced meal. Children could very well be spending the $1 the parents give them on ice cream, cup cakes and french fries. One way to ensure that your child will eat a decent meal for lunch is to purchase pre-paid lunch tickets. That way, your child can't waste his money on junk food. The weekly rates for those not wishing to carry the money for daily lunches is $3.75 for elementary school meals and $4.75 for secondary meals.

If students still continue to complain about what they're being served for lunch, they should contact the Food Services Department; people there are willing to listen to any complaints or suggestions one might have. That goes for parents as well. There are also students on the city's menu planning committee, so with their help, hopefully the school lunches will be more satisfactory to some students. - K.L.D.

People Everywhere Are Dancing

We see it on MTV, at nightclubs, at parties, weddings, you name it. Everywhere we go, people are dancing.

Back in the 1950's and 60's, dances had names, and everyone would do the same dance at the same time. Now, in the 80's, it seems like no two people dance alike. Everybody just does their own thing.

Most people dance for the fun of it or because dancing is an excellent form of exercise. But there are those who take their dancing very seriously. Take, for example, the dancers at Music In Motion, a dance studio on North Lynnhaven Road. These dancers are trained in ballet, jazz and tap, so there's nothing they can't do. Like most dedicated dancers, they start out at an early age and perfect their skills as they get older.

Many of the dancers in the Music In Motion dance company are teenagers, but you're never too old to dance! There are also plenty of adults still kicking up their heels.

The dance company will be giving a performance with the Governor's Magnet School of Dance Department at the Pavilion on March 11. The two groups combined will introduce several different dance styles for the audience to enjoy.

If you're interested in taking your dancing a little bit further, check out the dance recital at the Pavilion or simply pick up the phone and sign yourself up for a class. Whether you're young or old, you may discover some hidden talents you never knew you had! - K.L.D.

ECI Systems Dedicates New Beach Headquarters

U.S. Congressman Owen Pickett (Virginia 2nd District) and ECI Systems and Engineering President and CEO Dr. Richard Cheng recently cut the ribbon at the formal dedication of ECI's new corporate headquarters at the new Westmoreland Building of Koger Center.

ECI's first office, in 1980, was also located at Koger Center and consisted of only 120 square feet of office space. The new headquarters at 5700 Cleveland Street has over 12,000 square feet of office space.

ECI currently employs over 200 personnel and has corporate offices in Arlington and Lorton, Va., in addition to Virginia Beach. Dr. Cheng was formerly Associate Dean of Academic Affairs, Sciences at Old Dominion University in Norfolk and eminent professor/Chairman of Computer Science for the Commonwealth of Virginia.

Pickett Bill Would Restore Tax Exemptions For Education

In a move that could make it easier for thousands of working Americans to take college-level courses, U.S. Representative Owen Pickett (D-Va.) has introduced legislation to exclude certain employer-provided educational benefits from a worker's federal taxable income. Exemptions almost identical to those contained in today's bill expired at the end of last year.

Under Pickett's proposal, the first $5,250 in employer-provided education benefits paid to an employee for undergraduate studies would be exempt from taxable income. For graduate studies, the income exclusion would be $1,500.

Tax exemptions for such benefits were in effect until the December 31, 1988, when they expired.

Pickett said he introduced the bill because eliminating tax exemptions for employer-provided educational assistance has "sent the wrong message to American industry and to our workforce."

"If a business or industry is willing to invest its limited dollars in the education and training of one of its employees, federal policy should support this effort," he said.

"Without the exemptions, I am proposing, this educational benefit will lose a good part of its value, which in my view is a very bad development, particularly as American industry seeks to adapt to new and more competitive technologies from abroad."

Pickett noted that the City of Virginia Beach has provided its employees with education assistance in the form of tuition reimbursement for more than 15 years. He said that city officials have told him that the program was critical to attracting and retaining a "highly qualified and motivated workforce," but that participation in it is threatened by the expiration of the favorable tax treatment.

"The Virginia Beach program is exactly the kind of thing that the federal government should be encouraging — not discouraging," he added. "My bill will help to ensure that workers take advantage of these programs."

Pickett's bill was referred to the House Ways and Means Committee. No hearings have been scheduled.

matching fund required for the State Aid for Public Transportation Capital Funds for preliminary engineering for the light rail transit service.

Mayor Meyers Oberndorf who has voted with Henley on most major issues, voted against the resolution after explaining that she is not against regional cooperation, but that she did not think the system would work. To work, she said the system would have to take people where they want to go. She also mentioned the possibility of cost overruns.

She said that she understood she would be examined and blamed "by fine people like John Baum." Through the entire study and debate, she said, "I have tried to handle (the situation) in a fair fashion."

She said she would continue to work not to lose the lines of communication between the two cities "but I could not vote for this." She said that perhaps a line to the Naval Base could be constructed on the HOV lane or some place to relieve traffic. She said she was not looking to create a rift but "just this specific proposal I find difficult now."

Heischhofer, who made the motion for approval, seconded by Councilman John A. Baum, said that if there was anyone on council who would love for automobiles to be the only means of transportation, "it would be me." Heischhofer is an automobile dealer. He said that the way the consultant prepared the report was unfortunate because it made residents believe that growth would be rampant along the light rail line. "It's not the way council has been thinking," he said. "Growth issues stand apart."

"The way I see the need for mass transit system, in this case light rail, is a hope for things to happen. He said that the Columbus Circle flyover which is in the Capital Improvement Program will cost $31 million for 6,100 feet of roadway. (The light rail system will operate on the Norfolk-Southern tracks and will extend 17.7 miles. The cost is estimated at $102 million.) Heischhofer said that it costs millions of dollars to build one mile of four-lane divided highway.

"I doubt," he said, "we will live to see the light rail built out to regional station."

In late 1800, he said, when the water system was presented to Norfolk, the engineer proposing it was almost run out of the Council Chambers. "We are in that kind of mode," I believe what's good for Virginia Beach equates to what's good for the region and what's good for the region equates to what's good for the sum of the regions. We may have to put up more money than is anticipated," he said, but "We have to measure what we will have to put up with new roads." He said that he does not accept some of the estimates of the consultants "but for posterity's sake we must put together a mass transit system."

Boredom During Blizzard Makes The Mind Work

snow storms, in addition to providing me with some much needed time off from work, have given me an opportunity to publish some heretofore unpublished scientific observations in the area of unnatural sciences.

Like all good scientists I have published these observations in hopes that my theories will be confirmed by the observations of others.

Observation 1: The centrifugal force of a car spinning on ice will force a woman's hands off the steering wheel and into the air. Yet this same force will only force the hands of children to go in front of their eyes. I have also observed this same phenomenon on the twirling rides at Busch Gardens.

Observation 2: That the snow on sidewalks is deeper or more dangerous to pedestrians than the snow in the street. This is based watching pedestrians share the road with cars on Battlefield Boulevard.

Observation 3: That the weather that causes the roads to ice over also freezes the milk of human kindness. This theory is based on watching the great number of stranded motorists by-passed by their more fortunate brothers in heated automobiles.

Observation 4: That the air at six feet above snow covered roads is thinner than the air at ground level. This observation explains the fact that truck drivers continue to go 60 miles an hour on snow covered roads. This can only be explained by the lack of oxygen reaching these drivers brains in the rarefied atmosphere of a truck cab.

Observation 5: That cold air kills brain cells. How else can one explain why any normal child would stick their tongue on a metal sign post.

Observation 6: That your wife can tell without looking when there are six inches of snow and ice on the roads. How else can you explain their requests for volunteers to go to the store for milk at precisely the moment the roads become impassable.

Observation 7: That snow dissolves fireplace wood. How else can you explain running out of wood just when it begins to snow.

Observation 8: That snow causes adult males to regress into their childhood. Why else would a bald man in loafers try to build a snowman.

By now I'm sure that all of you have come to another scientific conclusion; that I didn't have anything better to do during the snow storm than to write this.

Supply and Demand Projections: Virginia Beach," Warnstaff said, is a paragraph which states that "if by 1990 the Lake Gaston Project is not sufficiently far along that the city is reasonably sure of its completion in the early 1990's and if additional short-term supplies cannot be made available, then the city must impose a moratorium on all new water connections."

To meet short-term emergency water needs, the city is again looking at wells in western Tidewater. The new report recommends that the city try to negotiate the contracts for the three emergency wells which expire in 1991 with the city of Suffolk and Southampton County. Contracts for two other wells continue through 1996.

The moratorium, to stave off added demand on the city's water system, and the wells, to fill emergency needs, are the only options presented in the report to meet short-term requirements.

And even if all five emergency wells are available, the report states, the supply would not be sufficient during major droughts for additional connections past 1990.

Growth in Virginia Beach is causing an average increase in water demand of approximately one million gallons a day (mgd) per year. Also, the city has 17,500 properties at various stages of development which could potentially be eligible for connection to the water system in the near future. These connections

Mayor's Committee On Aging Plays Vital Role In The City

The Mayor's Report

Virginia Beach Mayor
The Honorable
Meyera Oberndorf

For eighteen years, the Mayor's Committee on Aging has played a vital role in adding a new dimension to the quality of life, not only for the elderly but for citizens of all ages in Virginia Beach.

This energetic, devoted and compassionate group of 18 volunteers has as its purpose identifying the needs of the elderly, reviewing the services established to meet those needs, initiating public information programs, drafting and evaluating associated legislation, and assisting in the creation of special projects to serve the older citizens of the city. For the past two years, the Committee has received the state award of the Virginia Association on Aging for achievement of those goals.

The committee has been instrumental in obtaining tax relief for low-and-moderate-income elderly home owners; in persuading the city to issue a Golden Years Facility Use card with a one-time fee; and in the institution of the successful "Home Share Program" under the aegis of the Department of Housing and Community Development. The latter organization, incidentally, was established as a result of the recommendation of a Committee task force to review the housing needs of the elderly of the city and to recommend solutions for those needs.

problem has been to identify the needs of older citizens and the resources available to meet those needs, and then to educate the elderly population and their adult children regarding those resources. This problem led the committee to urge the local press to include in their reporting regular coverage of things of interest to the senior population. With Tidewater Community College, the committee initiated a series of TV programs on resources available to older citizens. The committee also established the "Senior Showcase of Services," an annual display of services for the elderly by city agencies and private service organizations.

The committee has involved the private sector in many ways in assisting the elderly. A local bank has formed a senior citizen's group for depositors, with benefits that include lower legal fees, higher interest rates

National PTA Holds Drug And Alcohol Awareness Week

The VBEA Report

By Clair Polley,
President of the Virginia
Beach Education Association

March 6 through 10 is the National PTA's Drug and Alcohol Awareness Week. During this week, schools are encouraged to promote activities that point out the dangers of drug and alcohol abuse.

In Virginia Beach, the program is titled "Get It Straight Week." Schools will have guest speakers from the police department, lawyers, and health workers all providing excellent information about the effects of drug and alcohol use.

We applaud the PTA and the 25 schools which participate in an effort called Drug Abuse Resistance Education (DARE) because substance abuse is taking a heavy toll on our economy and our future.

According to the House Select Committee on Narcotics Abuse and Control, more than 70 million Americans have used illegal drugs. It estimates that 170 million Americans spent $140 billion on illegal drugs. Law-enforcement officials say that over 60,000 tons of drugs will enter the country this year, but only about 5 percent of these will be interdicted.

But what about our schools? How do our students feel about alcohol and drug usage?

To answer these questions the Drug Education Advisory Committee of the Virginia Beach City Public Schools conducted a survey of secondary students in May, 1988.

The school division's survey is much more extensive than shown here, but its results indicate that there is a need for educating our students about the dangers of substance abuse.

They used the Primary Prevention Awareness, Attitude, and Usage Scale developed by Data Base Corporation to do a random sample of eighth, tenth and twelfth grade students representing all junior and senior high schools in the division. Both boys and girls were given the survey.

When asked where they most often used alcohol or drugs, students identified "parties" first, then "at home." Only about 1 percent of the respondents indicated they used drugs or alcohol at school.

Students were asked to identify the one source where they most often obtained the substances listed in the survey. Friends were the source most frequently identified followed by adults and students at school or outside of school.

The survey also asked about the use and frequency of cigarettes, alcohol beverages, and various drugs.

Roundtable Encourages Invest In The Humanities

By Lillian Youell,
Virginia Beach Constitution
Consultant

As Virginia Beach enters its third decade, it has come of age in the field of arts and humanities. The Virginia Beach Arts Center is under construction and the Virginia Beach Roundtable has been formed to encourage community interest in the humanities.

The idea for the Roundtable actually began around a coffee table in the fall of 1986. Donna K. Wells, public information specialist at Tidewater Community College was chatting with Dean E.T. "Joe" Buchanan about the possibility of forming a speakers series with broad based citywide support, somewhat along the lines of other city forums.

They immediately sought input from Martha J. Sims, director of public libraries, and Dr. Nancy T. Jones, director of the Gifted Program for the Virginia Beach Schools. Then, Dennis Raper, associate professor of history at TCC, was asked to join the group for a planning session. Thus, the steering committee was formed, and the scope was broadened to include the participation of high school and college students.

In September of 1987, the committee applied to the Virginia Beach Arts and Humanities Commission for matching funds, and decided on the topic, "Humanities in Contemporary Society." Arrangements were worked out for use of city facilities. A budget and other details were approved. By March of 1988, the three speakers and three nights for the 1988-89 series had been selected, and planning was begun for 1989-90.

The idea for the Roundtable actually began around a coffee table in the fall of 1986.

The "first night" program was held in the auditorium of the Virginia Beach Central Library Jan. 12. The speaker was former Navy Secretary James H. Webb, Jr. and his message was clear. The extent of our military involvement around the world has been unprecedented in our history, particularly with respect to long-term, static defensive positions that have drained both our economic and military resources.

Webb reminded us that we were once the greatest creditor nation in the world and today we are the greatest debtor nation. Withdrawing troops from Western Europe and letting the NATO allies pick up the slack would give us more defense dollars at home. The time has also come to persuade Japan to assume its rightful share of its own defense.

Following Webb's presentation, there were questions from the audience. Then, the next morning, he conducted a seminar for selected students from the six Virginia Beach public high schools and from Tidewater Community College.

The Municipal Cable Network, channel 29, taped his remarks, which

Lee Cahill's City Council Report

Improve Sandbridge Road Before Expansion Of Refuge

The city plans to acquire right-of-way for the improvement of Sandbridge Road before it finds itself locked in by the proposed expansion of the Back Bay National Wildlife Refuge.

City council by a vote of 9-1 adopted a resolution to begin negotiations with appropriate parties to acquire land for the future widening or relocation of the last mile of Sandbridge Road. The project is not in the city's five-year Capital Budget nor in plans during the subsequent five-year period. Councilman John D. Moss dissented and Mayor Meyera Oberndorf abstained.

Council also adopted a resolution by a vote of 7-4 requesting the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service to extend the public comment period on the Draft Environmental Assessment for an additional six months to give citizens time to provide detailed comments to the federal government. The comment period expired Feb. 28. Dissenting were Mayor Meyera Oberndorf, Councilmen John A. Baum and John D. Moss, and Councilwoman Nancy Parker.

The Sandbridge resolution stated that the planned expansion of Back Bay National Wildlife Refuge may affect access to the area, inhibit hurricane evacuation and possibly affect the ability of the city of Virginia Beach to provide public services to the area. The Service wants to acquire an additional 6,400 acres to expand the 4,600 acre refuge.

Barry Iwanowski, of 308 Grebe Crescent, Sandbridge, supported the resolution and Richard W. Whittemore, of 313 Pike Circle, representing the Back Bay restoration Association opposed the widening of the road, and said it would have a detrimental effect on Back Bay.

Fourteen citizens addressed council in opposition to or in favor of the extension request. Among the speakers, those representing the Back Bay Citizens Alliance, mainly property owners of land in the expansion area, supported the extension, and representatives of the Sierra Club and the Back Bay Restoration saw no need for an extension.

Anthony D. Leger, refuge manager, said that misinformation on the project continues to circulate. He said that where the comment period is generally 30 days, this one was extended to 45 days because of the intervening Christmas holidays. Leger also pointed out that owners of 3,000 acres have already indicated they are willing to sell their property. A project delay, he said, would make the project more expensive.

He also said that the Service would have a better chance of getting funding from the Land and Water Conservation Fund. Leger said that the government has been open and honest with the public and has not proposed to take anyone's land. He said that condemnation is used in less than one half of one percent of the cases, generally to clear titles or to establish value. Although the service has not proposed using condemnation powers, "we can't give up condemnation authority," he said.

The ordinance using a certificate of occupancy as a mechanism to upgrade property in the city is back.

This time, the ordinance proposes application only to rental properties and these only in areas designated by the city manager.

An ordinance proposed last year drew opposition from individual property owners and realtors resulting in a redrafting of the ordinance.

The reworked ordinance was presented to city council at a work session but will be reviewed by various interest groups before it is returned to council for final consideration.

William Macali, assistant city manager, said that the new ordinance addresses the criticisms of the previous ordinance. The chief objection was that the ordinance did not apply to rental properties which would be more likely to be in poor condition than owner-occupied housing.

Other criticisms were that the ordinance burdened homeowners,

Of reports that the property values are going down because of the proposed expansion, he said that he did not believe this was so. Also, he said, if some of the property owners don't wish to sell, the service will wait for the next generation and approach them.

Mark Yatrofsky, of 1231 Land making it difficult to sell a house; that the inspections were an invasion of privacy; and that it applied to housing stock that was ten years or older although the age of the housing is not necessarily an indication of its state of repair.

Under the new ordinance, rental units may not be occupied by a new tenant until a certificate of occupancy is granted. Also, no matter how many tenants occupy the rental housing during a year, only one certificate is required.

Regardless of the requirements of ordinance, no housing is exempt from the city code.

The city plans to have an arrangement with Virginia Power so that power service is not continued for a new tenant until a certificate of occupancy is issued.

The process would require an inspection by the city to uncover defects which would have to be corrected before a certificate is issued. Inspections may be made before the old tenant moves out so that the Street, Norfolk, representing the Chesapeake Bay Group of the Sierra Club, said that adequate efforts to involve the public have been made and an extension of the deadline would not serve any purpose.

Henry Johnson, of 604 Glen Gary Court, said that he is in and out of town all the time and had a problem getting information on the acquisition. He supported the extension.

Charles Bowles, of 2716 Bluebill Drive, representing the Back Bay

Citizens Alliance, said that he is concerned that the project is moving forward at a breakneck pace.

The property owner has to notify the city or a change in tenants, and inspections will be made within five working days. The first inspection will cost $25 and half that amount after the corrections are made. If the problems are not addressed after the first inspection, another $25 will be charged for an inspection. The charges, said Macali, are to pay for the cost of administering the ordinance.

denial of the resolution passed. Voting in against denial of the resolution were Henley, Heischober, Baum, Fentress and William D. Sessions, Jr. voting for denial of the resolution were Oberndorf, Councilmen John D. Moss, John L. Perry, and Albert W. Balko and Councilwoman Nancy Parker and McClanahan.

Moss had said that the vote was not a vote for or against the concept but whether to proceed with this specific alternative. The city's immediate share in the cost, he said, reading a prepared statement, is $500,000 with a continuing liability of $1.5 million. He said that he was opposed because it was ineffective, in conflict with the city's comprehensive plan and does not include access to the Naval Base in its first phase.

Water Project

tions would require 6 mgd.

Besides, the cities of Suffolk and Norfolk recently executed a contract for water supply which has resulted in a 2 mgd liability to the Norfolk system which furnishes all of the water in the Virginia Beach system and also part of the water in the Chesapeake system.

The report recommends that the city determine the feasibility of acquiring new emergency wells in western Tidewater and should include the investigation of the availability and suitability of new well sites and the determination of water quality on the Norfolk system.

Much of the work cut out for the city involves legal determinations. The report recommends that copies of the report be sent to the City of Norfolk, the Virginia Department of Health and the Virginia State Water Control Board for review and comment.

However, the report states, if immediate concrete progress on the project is not being made, then the city should to the extent that it has appropriate legal authority, take whatever steps it can to prevent increases in the water demand on the Norfolk water system.

The report finally recommends that the city should continue to expedite the Lake Gaston project with all diligent speed, but should not attempt to begin construction on the project at this time.

Cafeteria

"They get their choice of two meats, two vegetables and two fruits everyday," Schrist said.

The city's secondary schools everyday offer a salad plate, a sandwich line and a hot entree. Secondary schools, unlike the elementary schools, provide desserts such as ice cream, cupcakes, yogurt and fruit pies. Desert in an elementary school consists of canned or fresh fruit.

Three primary schools have an added feature that the others don't, a breakfast program. The program, held at Point O' View, Holland and Windsor Oaks Elementary, is available from 8:30 to 9 a.m.

"They can go whenever they arrive," said Schrist.

Schrist said that 60 to 65 percent of the 67,000 students attending public schools participate in the school lunch program. Elementary school lunches cost 75 cents, while junior high and high school students pay 85 cents. Dessert at the secondary schools is 25 cents extra.

A "free and reduced" meal plan is available for students whose family's income is below that of the average student. Depending on the income bracket the student falls under, a lunch may be free or cost as little as 25 cents.

Students who have free or reduced lunch tickets must hand his ticket to the cafeteria cashier, who keeps a roster of file cards of the students who qualify for discounted meals.

The tickets are coded so other students don't know if their classmates are in need of financial help.

"Nobody's really supposed to know," said Jean Amoe, cafeteria manager at Plaza Junior High School, "but these kids tell each other everything."

Schrist said the most popular items on the lunch menu are pizza and chicken filled patties. Both Schrist and Amoe agreed that pizza outranks the chicken.

"It's a real toss up but probably pizza is more popular," Schrist said.

Amoe said at Plaza the cafeteria usually serves about 1,000 students a day, but, "on pizza day we have more than that."

The school menus are made by a Menu Planning Committee, which consists of PTA members, students and cafeteria managers. Schrist said the food services people sent out a survey in the fall to several schools to get a handle on what students do and do not like to eat. By having students on the planning committee, she said it is easier to plan meals the students will enjoy.

Schrist said there have been instances where a parent complained that their child wasn't being offered a balanced meal. She added that it is the student's choice what they eat and food services has no control over what the student purchases.

"We do encourage comments," she said. "We're more than happy to listen."

Most of the food supplied to the schools is ordered from several distributors, but Schrist said, "we do get a lot of different commodity foods," from the USDA Commodity Program. She said that last year's food budget was $2 million, but this year it is projected at $4.5 million.

There are certain sanitary conditions that have to be met in a cafeteria. Every manager must participate in a food certification course and attend monthly meetings about sanitation. Members of the cafeteria staff also take the 16-hour training course. Schrist said the city's Health Department inspects the schools every two months.

"They really do brag on us. They say Virginia Beach schools have really done well. That makes us really happy," Schrist said.

Alcohol

Twenty-seven percent of the twelfth-grade students drink beer at least once or twice a week, 28 percent drink beer once or twice a month and 15 percent drink beer once or twice a year. An average of 36 percent of the eighth- and tenth-grade students drink beer once or twice a month.

The number of students drinking wine was about the same as beer. Willingness to drink liquor was lower at all three grade levels.

The startling statistics from the survey were that of the students who reported drinking alcohol at least monthly, 83 percent said they drink until they are drunk. Ninety-one percent of the twelfth-grade students who drink at least monthly also said they drink until they are drunk.

Marijuana

Students reported using marijuana regularly starting in eighth grade. Approximately 10 percent of eighth- and tenth-grade students and 25 percent of twelfth-grade students use marijuana monthly or more often. More boys than girls reported usage.

Hallucinogens

Less than two percent of eighth- and tenth-graders and 18 percent of twelfth-graders said they have used hallucinogens, but 13 percent of eighth- and tenth-graders and 20 percent of twelfth-graders said they were willing to try hallucinogens.

Stimulants

Twenty-one percent of the seniors and 14 percent of the eighth- and tenth-grade students said they were willing to try stimulants.

Cocaine

Seniors were the only group reporting regular use of cocaine, but five percent of the eighth- and tenth-grade students said they would be willing to try cocaine.

The answers to the survey question raise concerns about substance use and location of use because 80 percent of the seniors who indicated substance use also answered that they used these substances at locations from which they would need transportation.

The survey results also show that students drive under the influence of alcohol and drugs; and that one-third of the seniors, at least once a month, ride with a person who has been drinking. Within the past year, 31 percent of the eighth- and tenth-grade students and 60 percent of the twelfth-grade students have, at least once, been a passenger in a vehicle driven by a person who had been drinking.

When asked if they believed a drug and/or alcohol problem exists, over seventy percent of the students said that they believe a problem exists and approximately 12 percent said it is interfering with their ability to learn.

"It's good exposure for young ones to perform and learn from the older ones," she said.

Kelly said many of the older dancers, most of them in their teens, have been with the Music In Motion school for at least five or six years and have "made the commitment that they want to be good dancers."

Kelly, along with fellow choreographers Judith Hatcher and Cindy Free, has been coordinating five of the eight dance pieces to be performed at the Pavilion. This year, Music In Motion will be sharing the stage with the Governor's Magnet School Dance Department, which Kelly said, "we're really excited about."

Kelly said many of the dancers from her company and the Magnet School know each other and have worked together in the past. She said she thought it would be a good idea to combine the talents of both companies. This is the first time Music In Motion has performed with another dance company.

"It's going to be a really nice situation," she said.

The Pavilion performance will feature the works of several new choreographers, one of them being Beach resident Elizabeth Koepfen, now a student at The State University of New York at Purchase.

"We feel very fortunate to have someone local to draw a larger local audience," Kelly said.

The dance company has also been busy making additional local performances. Kelly said, "Currently, we've been invited by the Virginia Beach Public Schools to do lecture demonstrations for Black History Month." The company has done two performances per morning at 10 area schools.

"The purpose of the company is to give the dancers performing experience. We try to give them as much as we can," she said.

Kelly said the dance pieces featured in the performance will consist "primarily of modern and ballet and a little bit of jazz so people can see the varying amount of dance forms." She said that the members of the company, who are chosen by audition only, must have at least two years of extensive training in ballet. She said jazz and ballet classes are equally popular, but "ballet is the basis of all dance."

The dance company is a non-profit part of the Music In Motion Dance School, located on North Lynnhaven Road. Kelly said approximately 120 to 130 dancers, ages four to adult, take modern, ballet, jazz and tap classes at the studio. She said some classes begin at $28 per hour, but the rates change depending on how many hours of classes the dancer attends.

"There are many, many classes going on there," Kelly said.

Kelly said the recent popularity of dance over the last 15 to 20 years is due to "a more intense realization on the public's part to become more involved with the arts," not to mention the media such as MTV.

"There's more of an interest on the general public's part to support the arts. I think it's growing," she said.

als. The city forked over a whopping $160,000 during the course of the blizzard.

Both clearing crews, 80 employees of the state and 70 of the city, worked in 12-hour shifts.

"They worked in 12-hour shifts, so 24 hours a day someone was working," said Hadjiyiassemi.

"It went pretty well. We were there as it started and worked through until it finished," Gribok said.

The storm, which began late Thursday night and lasted until Saturday afternoon, made roadways virtually impassable. Gribok said it was important to get the first layer of abrasives under the accumulation of snow, which they did until the snow passed.

He said they maintained the mainline then worked on the expressway's ramps second, keeping two lanes in each direction passable.

Gribok and Hadjiyiassemi said their crews were prepared for the storm. Hadjiyiassemi said, despite the icy roads, snow drifts and low visibility, "we were not surprised. We managed to apply chemicals before the temperature started falling. We were ahead of the storm."

He added that they were not prepared for the snow storm the weekend before the blizzard, because the forecast had predicted lower accumulations.

"It was good practice," he said. Gribok, on the other hand, said the first snow storm was "fairly easy" to clear because the snow was so wet.

The police, fire and rescue squads were also prepared for the storm, answering 559 emergency calls on the Friday of the blizzard and 654 calls on Saturday. Thurston said the number of calls was "lower than a normal day."

Both Gribok and Hadjiyiassemi said materials were plentiful during the storm. The state replenished its salt supply twice, and afterwards Gribok said, "We continue to repair, restock and get ready to go again."

He added that they did not deplete their stock and it takes 24 hours to restock to bring their supplies back up to 100 percent.

"We order right away, as soon as supplies get depleted," Hadjiyiassemi said.

Although the snow has been replaced by rain, Gribok said the snow season may not be over yet. "I don't think we're out of the snow season until March 15. The possibility exists," he said.

under certain conditions, and lower travel costs. At the urging of the committee, a local law firm has agreed to assist seniors at reduced fees. The committee supported SEVAMP, an area agency for the elderly, in persuading physicians of the Virginia Beach Medical Society to accept Medicare payments as the total payments due from the low-income elderly.

The committee also took the initiative in coordinating the efforts of senior service organizations such as AARP and RSVP in providing carefully trained volunteers to assist older people in filing Medicaid, Medicare and supplementary health insurance claims and forms, as well as with the filing of tax forms. These volunteer groups meet needs for the elderly that otherwise would not be met.

To quote The Virginia Beach Sun, September 1982: "The Mayor's Committee on Aging is dedicated to the belief that the elderly, with understanding and a minimum of assistance, can make valuable contributions to our community. They possess the experience and wisdom that only age can bring."

As mayor of Virginia Beach, I have been impressed by the initiative, dedication, teamwork and ingenuity demonstrated by the members of the Mayor's Committee on Aging, as they seek answers to the problems of our elderly citizens. No matter how difficult the problem, the positive attitude of each member of the committee ensures that a proper answer will be found. Furthermore, their energy and persistence will guarantee that the solution, once found, will be implemented. The Mayor's Committee on Aging is an inspiration to me and to all involved in the administration of the City of Virginia Beach.

Evaldi

Evaldi said working at Gus' is much different from the Lynnhaven Fish House. Gus' now has the capability of holding 500 people in a banquet facility. Three and a half years ago, the old Ramada was torn down and a 17-story high rise hotel was built in its place. The restaurant was changed to Gus' Mariner Restaurant.

"It was quite a lot of work. We really upgraded the Ramada," Evaldi said. As executive chef, Evaldi is in charge of all food operations, including breakfast, lunch, dinner, banquets and catering to hotel guests. He also does all the ordering for the restaurant. He said his excellent staff is what keeps the restaurant consistent.

"I just love the business, period. I love working with food; it's a challenge," he said. "I'll probably be here forever."

Evaldi was recently elected Chef of the Year by the Tidewater chapter of the American Culinary Federation, of which Evaldi is the treasurer.

"I was the lucky one this year," he said. "I was thrilled to death. I've been working for it for about four years now."

Needing To Nest

By Jennifer Hathaway
Staff Writer

Anthony D. Leger, Back Bay National Wildlife Refuge manager, recently announced that a one-mile section of the refuge will be closed through the end of October.

According to Kathy Zeamer, outdoor recreation planner, the refuge in 1986 began the practice of closing a portion of the beach. The closure is part of an effort to provide an undisturbed feeding and resting habitat for over 30 species of shorebirds, Zeamer said.

She added that so far, the shorebirds have not been interested in nesting in the refuge, located beside Sandbridge, but refuge officials hope to encourage nesting.

"One of our objectives is resting and feeding areas, but we have the potential for nesting," Zeamer said. "That would be great."

The increased protection provided by the closure in 1986 resulted in greater numbers of shorebirds using the beach and increased sightings of black terns and piping plovers.

"Last year, I saw about 30 brown pelicans resting in that area, and that's unusual," Zeamer said.

The northernmost one mile of beach, from Little Island City Park to the refuge vehicular access ramp, will be closed to all uses. Zeamer said that signs will be posted to indicate that this area is closed, as well as a string of cable outlining the area.

A designated area, on the ocean-side of the closed zone, will be open to foot traffic only, allowing the visitors to still walk along the length of beach. The remaining three miles of beach will be open for wildlife-oriented activities such as hiking, nature photography, wildlife observation and surf fishing. Non-wildlife activities such as swimming, sunbathing and surfing will be prohibited.

Thirteen Virginia Wineries Exhibited 47 Different Wines At The Pavilion; Festival Featured 1988 Wines

By Karen Dalrymple
Staff Writer

Wine lovers had a field day. Approximately 2,000 people wet their whistles with red, blush, Riesling, Chardonnay and fruity wines at the second annual Tidewater Virginia Wine Festival held recently at the Pavilion.

Thirteen wineries from the Charlottesville area brought samples of their products to be tasted and bought. Owner and winemaker of Mountain Cove Wine Vineyards in Lovingsville, Va., Al Weed, is one of the three people responsible for organizing this year's festival.

According to Weed, the purpose of the festival was to "sell some wine and introduce people to us as a group. We've done a lot of cooperative advertising."

Weed said that although 60 percent of the vineyards in the state are within 60 miles of Charlottesville, there are wineries all over Virginia. He said northern Virginia has the "other concentration."

Of the 47 wines that were available to taste at the festival, Weed said Chardonnay is the most popular. Three of the thirteen wineries that were present at the festival don't produce a Chardonnay wine, which is a dry white dinner wine with a touch of fruitiness.

"It's the classic white burgundy wine," Weed said.

Another favorite was the Riesling, a slightly sweet, semi-dry wine.

Weed said the wines at the festival ranged in price from $5 on the low end to $13 on the high end for "good, limited red wines." He said the bulk of the wines cost between $7 and $8 and by-the-case discounts were available.

"That's still expensive compared to some wines but Virginia wines are coming down, or other types of wines are going up," he said. "The quality of the wines in Virginia is increasing."

Weed said the wine-making process is "not very complicated." He said the most important ingredient in making wine is ripe, clean fruit.

12,000 Walkers Expected To Raise $860,000 For March Of Dimes On Sunday, April 30

By Lisa Richardson

Walkers, put on your walking shoes. It's time for the 1989 march of Dimes Walk America. This annual event is expected to draw over 12,000 participants and raise over $600,000 in Hampton Roads this year, according to Toni Fennell, communications director.

Last year, over 8,000 different families in the Hampton Roads area received help through programs supported by the March of Dimes, according to Fennell. The Resource Mothers Program is one which recruits adult women from several area communities to seek out and help young neighborhood girls who are at risk of becoming, or are pregnant and in need of counseling, guidance and medical care.

"Prenatal care can prevent hundreds of birth defects from happening," said Fennell.

The Southeastern Virginia Food Bank is another program funded by the March of Dimes. This program is designed to provide medicine and food until government aid such as food stamps and WIC can be received, said Fennell. There is usually a 30- to 45-day delay between applying and receiving such aid, according to Fennell. "This is where the Food Bank kicks in," she said.

"There are thousands of birth defects and hundreds are preventable," urged Fennell. "It's just getting to these mothers in time."

Another program supported by the March of Dimes is Project Alpha, designed to provide adult male guidance for teenage boys. They take three-day weekend trips to talk about problems at school or at home, sex and drug abuse.

In addition to teens and prenatal care, funds raised by the Walk America participants also go towards national research which is looking into causes and cures for thousands of birth defects, as well as to provide support groups for families who have children with birth defects, said Fennell.

Dementia

1,500 Alzheimer's Disease Sufferers In Virginia Beach; Many Find Help In Support Groups

By Lisa Richardson

It may begin with the simple forgetting of names. Then faces begin to become less distinct to its victims. A person suffering from this disease may get into his car and under driving a few blocks down the street forget why and where he is driving.

An estimated 1,569 people in Virginia Beach suffer from this physically debilitating and mentally devastating disease known as dementia, or Alzheimer's disease, according to Theresa Kieffer Davis, executive director of the Hampton Roads Chapter of the Alzheimer's Association, a non-profit organization.

Though the cause is still undetermined, researchers believe it to be virally and/or genetically linked, according to Theresa Kieffer Davis, executive director of the Hampton Roads Chapter of the Alzheimer's Association, a non-profit organization.

"It's a slow, progressive, deteriorating disease," said Kieffer Davis. "It's the short-term memory that goes first. People may say they're reverting back to childhood. That's just not the case," Kieffer Davis explained. People suffering from Alzheimer's may not be able to remember what, or whether they had breakfast this morning, but may recall fishing trips from their childhood in vivid detail. "It's the long-term memory that stays with them longer," said Kieffer Davis.

Between five and ten percent of people over the age of 65, and 20 to 25 percent of people over the age of 80 have some type of dementia. While dementia is a medical term for memory impairment which encompasses numerous conditions, Alzheimer's disease accounts for 50 to 60 percent of all dementia, said Kieffer Davis.

Alzheimer's disease is a progressive deterioration of the brain, according to Kieffer Davis. While symptoms vary from person to person, intermittent behavior is prominent among sufferers. Numerical problems in the form of checkbook mistakes or misdialed phone numbers may occur frequently. An inability to follow cooking or traffic directions may

"I don't think it's the nature of my work but the attitude I do not complain," says Aviation Storekeeper Third Class (AK3) Victorino Lambinico, who was chosen Naval Air Station Oceana Sailor of the Quarter by a selection board of chief petty officers.

"When I am assigned a job or I am asked to do something, I do not complain," adds Lambinico. He also admits to being determined and not giving up easily.

Lambinico joined the U.S. Navy from Subic Bay in the Philippines in April, 1986 at the suggestion of his father. Lambinico left his fourth year of studies at the University of the East for the Navy because, "I did it out of respect to my parents. The culture over there is that children listen to parents." He had adjustments to make - fitting into the Navy, the United States, "boot camp" and adapting to the way of life, all of which Lambinico describes as "culture shock."

After completing boot camp in San Diego, Calif. and A School in Meridian, Miss., Lambinico returned to the Philippines to marry his college sweetheart Maribeth. When they dated during college, he would write stories and enter writing contests to earn money to take her out. Here a year, Maribeth found transition easier, "because," Lambinico explains, "When I finally got her here, I helped her in adapting to American life and also setting up our home." The two are expecting their first child in August.

As a member of the Aviation Support-Division of the Supply Department, Lambinico expedites requisitions for support equipment gear for the various squadron aircraft here. He processes orders as the middleman between the squadron requisitioning an item and the supply system. He is also a member of the auxiliary security force in platoon one.

Light-Rail Study Refusal Evokes Conflicting Views

The city council's refusal to approve funding for the light rail line study to Norfolk has been considered a fatal blow to the city by some observers.

Council voted 6-5 against funding for the light rail study. Some argue that the rail would not have taken a majority of Beach commuters where they most need to go, namely the Norfolk Naval Base.

Mayor Meyera E. Oberndorf is said to have cast the deciding vote. She said she could not support the line if it did not go to the base.

The mayor's position is understandable considering the fact that the local naval bases have a notable economic impact on the community.

The project study has evoked mixed feelings from both Virginia Beach and Norfolk residents. Pro-light railers are said to have not yet declared the study dead. In fact, Chesapeake officials are now considering the rail for their city.

Tidewater Regional Transit officials say it is impossible to study a new light-rail route going to the naval base. Others argue that all the money for the study has been spent, and further monies are expected for the study.

The rail would have run along Norfolk Southern railroad tracks. Its 17.7 miles of rail would have run from the Pavilion convention center in Virginia Beach to Plume and Granby streets in downtown Norfolk, with 11 stations in between.

It is possible that a naval base link might help the rail study project become a reality. But there are too many questions left unanswered and too many unresolved issues as of now. Money problems and disputes over route planning will first have to strike a happy medium if this project is to ever get off the ground. And that's just for starters.

Only time will tell. Until then, Beach citizens will have to wait until parties with conflicting views come to an agreement. - M.A.G.

Don't Forget Alzheimers Patients

Imagine yourself, for a moment, with amnesia. You can no longer remember names or recognize faces and voices that were once familiar to you. You can no longer recall your wedding day, the birthday of your firstborn or even the day before yesterday.

Forgetting something as simple as the title to a song or the name of an acquaintance can be a frustrating experience. Imagine what it would be like to live daily with a condition like amnesia; to live daily in a world you've just imagined.

Perhaps you know someone with Alzheimer's disease. Perhaps this person is a friend, a neighbor, a co-worker. Maybe this person is a member of your family, even your immediate family.

It is a difficult and emotionally painful disease for both the victim and the family. Because they no longer feel capable of interacting in social situations, they avoid them altogether. Caregivers often drop out of social situations, too, in order to tend to the needs of the Alzheimer's patient.

We often sit by and wait for people to ask us for help. We sometimes think that we'll be "in the way" or that someone else other than ourselves should be the one to volunteer his time or services.

Isolation always accompanies this sad and mysterious disease. But it doesn't have to be this way. Just a brief phone call, card or visit can make all of the difference in the day of a patient. Let them know you care about them and think of them often.

Let them know you haven't forgotten them. - L.A.R.

Refuge Protecting Wildlife

The Back Bay National Wildlife Refuge's closing of a one-mile section of its facility in order to help shorebirds is an effort to be commended.

The refuge's action shows that even in these days of high technology, wildlife should not be disregarded. It's comforting to know that an organization in the community is concerned about the well being of the beautiful shorebirds.

After all, people make allowances for road construction and detours that last well over their intended times. The one-mile section of the refuge will only be closed until the end of October.

The temporary blockade is a small price to pay in an effort that is expected to provide an undisturbed feeding and resting habitat for over 30 species of shorebirds. The refuge is said to also have nesting potential.

A similar effort in 1986 resulted in greater numbers of shorebirds using the beach and increased sightings of other species.

The barrier will allow visitors to walk the full length of the beach. Motor access ramps will be closed.

Wildlife advocates will be pleased to learn that the blockade will benefit the piping plover, a bird which was listed in the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service Endangered Species List in January 1986. - M.A.G.

Stay Healthy, Start Walking

Walking has evolved as a popular sport in and around Virginia Beach in recent years. We have become more aware of our cholesterol levels, the fiber in our diets and that spare tire around our waists.

Now is the time to help others while we also help ourselves to a healthy portion of exercise in the annual March of Dimes Walk-A-Marathon. Through a couple of hours of our time and a few aching muscles, we can make a difference in the fight against birth defects right here in Virginia Beach.

So, get up off the couch, put this paper down (after you've finished reading it, of course) and deck your walking shoes. Your friends and neighbors are counting on you. - L.A.R.

It's an important night for me, my staff in the commonwealth's attorney's office, as well as the citizens of Virginia Beach. It's important, because of the many accomplishments of the last seven years that my staff and I am proud of and have brought us this far. Proud of what it is that we want to continue for the next four years. Important, because despite of what we have accomplished, there are some who want to cast it all aside because I had an accident.

I did have an accident. And that's exactly what it was - an accident. You know, they don't call them accidents because they're planned. There were no improper circumstances involved as some of my critics would have you believe. And those who say that or anything like that are not telling the truth.

I have never had any say in city insurance matters, nor did I in this one. In fact, even city council had no say in this matter. The city attorney and risk management made the decision and they alone.

But, my friends, my record as your Commonwealth's Attorney is no accident! I have a staff of professionals and a list of accomplishments of which I am very, very proud!

When I came into office in 1982, I worked with the Virginia Beach Police Department and the Department of Social Services in organizing the Family Trauma Team -- a group that helps in dealing with one of the most serious crimes imaginable -- sexual abuses of children by relatives. The Family Trauma Team offers aid and comfort to those children who are abused, as well as investigates and prosecutes those responsible for this heinous crime.

I assigned three experienced, full-time attorneys to Juvenile and Domestic Relations Court. It ceased being a training ground for inexperienced lawyers as in the past, and is now an area that deserves and requires full-time attention and experience. Last year alone they handled over 1,100 cases of which 174 child abuse cases.

I also resurrected the Career Criminal Program by assigning experienced prosecutors to focus special attention on defendants with long criminal histories. This way, we go after the 10 of every 100 criminals who commit 30 percent of all crimes. And it has been successful. Last year we prosecuted 645 cases.

When I came into office in 1982, the Victim/Witness Program was all but abandoned. Here we had a program that was supposed to smooth the way for victims and witnesses who had to appear in court. The federal grant expired, and I convinced the city council to pick up the costs. This program averages 250 calls per month and results in about 60 cases per month. It is a haven for the Victim/Witness that demonstrates the justice system is working for them, not against them.

I have worked to fight the battle with drugs in our city. In addition to the one-half dozen prosecutors assigned to handle these cases we have one prosecutor who has been cross-designated to work with the Federal Court. This has allowed us to bypass some of the delays in the state courts and prosecute -- severely and swiftly -- those who push their garbage in our schools and our streets.

I worked with the city manager to transfer the Consumer Protection Unit from the Office of Permits and Inspections to the Commonwealth's Attorney's Office. This gave them the clout and force needed to ensure that trusting citizens in Virginia Beach are not used by schemers.

The complete text of each candidate's speech is as follows:

In conjunction with the police department, I helped establish the Crime Solvers Program for Virginia Beach. Since May, 1982, more than 4,000 cases have been cleared and almost $3 million in stolen goods and narcotics recovered. For five consecutive years, Virginia Beach Crime Solvers has received awards from Crimestoppers International for the best clearance rate in our population category. In keeping with earlier campaign promises to not only be an effective administrator but an active prosecutor as well, I personally handled almost 200 felony cases last year alone along with my other responsibilities. I feel it's important that we -- from the top prosecutor down -- send a message to criminals that we will work vigorously to see that those who commit crimes in Virginia Beach -- no matter the nature -- will be punished swiftly and severely.

There are those from the other party who say I have not been effective, who say I play politics with the office. They're wrong. I don't play politics in my work. I prosecute Republicans, Democrats, and Independents alike.

Many of these same people thought my work as a prosecutor was excellent until I did what many of them now consider unforgivable -- I became a Democrat! It was not a decision I took lightly.

I believe that there are times, as John Kennedy once said, when party loyalty asks too much.

Two years ago, I was faced with such an occasion.

I have always believed that political decisions and affiliations must be based upon integrity, of the cost of the regional jail, with no cap. State reimbursement for construction of local jails is 50 percent but with caps which bring the state contribution much lower than 50 percent of the cost.

Jail

City Council Reporter

Arthur Collins, executive director of SVPDC, and Lawrence Siegel, of Lawrence Siegel Consultants, Inc., presented a briefing to Virginia Beach city council at a recent work session.

For a $27.5 million, 300-bed regional jail, the state would provide $13.75 million. For the same jail built locally, the state would contribute $12 million.

Collins said that the construction of a regional jail would not change the need for the city's jail addition but would help the city in the long term.

Siegel said that all of the jails in the region are overcrowded and that the localities face an inevitable increase in jail population.

Under the proposal, the regional jail would house only prisoners who have been sentenced (up to five years) while other prisoners would remain in the local jails. Much of the overcrowding in the jails has resulted from the state's inability or refusal to place prisoners sentenced to five years or less in state institutions.

Sentenced inmates make up about 45 percent of the jail population. Siegel said that there is no indication that the state will start taking these inmates in state institutions again.

During the past 12 years in Virginia Beach, the sentenced jail population has increased by 10.2 persons a year.

The inmates in southeastern Virginia are expected to increase from about 1,600 in 1988 to 4,500 in 2013.

Aside from the additional state funding, advantages of a regional jail outlined by Siegel include the reduced need for local capital expense and debt burden; the brokering of vacant beds to receive prisoners from other overcrowded local jails; and charging a premium; increased capability for accommodating local fluctuations; and economies of scale.

On the other side, travel distances would be longer, more time and expense would be needed to create and maintain a new or expanded regional institution, and the host community's commonwealth's attorney must prosecute offenses at a regional facility.

Collins said that before spending any money, the commission will have to determine where the jail be located. Both Chesapeake and Franklin have been suggested as potential sites. He said that the host city would receive some type of compensation.

As the first step in the process, the localities will have to decide whether to participate and go ahead with the initial preliminary design and study the financial and legal issues. An advisory committee of local staff and corrections officials will be established, and short-term funding will be arranged for short-term additional engineering, financing and staffing studies for a particular site.

The first phase, which would cost $600,000, could be financed by participating localities. Based on population, if all eight localities participated, the Virginia Beach share would be $210,000. Other communities and their share would be: Chesapeake, $84,000; Norfolk, $174,600; Portsmouth, $68,400; Suffolk, $31,800; Franklin, $4,800; Isle of Wight, $15,000; and Southampton, $11,400.

The Planning District also could borrow the funds and roll them into Phase II if the project were continued.

The cities would have to pay only if the project was dropped.

Councilman John D. Moss questioned the population basis for computing shares. Collins said that the formula just happened to be the simplest way.

Mayor Meyera Oberndorf wanted to know whether the administrator of the new establishment would be a professional or another elected official, like a regional sheriff.

Collins said that he would hope that the administrator would be a professional.

Moss said that he would also like council's participation on the advisory committee.

Evans

Today I am announcing that I will seek the Democratic nomination for commonwealth's attorney. The Democratic Party should have a candidate who will be an asset -- one who is electable. The fall campaign against the Republicans will not be easy.

When I was first elected, this was a small-town, part-time office. When I left 14 years later it was a modern, efficient, well-managed office in the largest city in the commonwealth. In the meantime we instituted innovative programs. In addition to our normal duties we had special assistant commonwealth's attorneys assigned to prosecute major offenders, welfare fraud, and white collar crime. We made prosecution a full time job, as it should have been, and we actually trained our prosecutors, something that had never been done before.

Most of all, for those directly affected by crime, we designed and put in place a Victim/Witness Program. No longer would a person be victimized again -- this time by the system. There is a way to find out if your case will be tried as scheduled, and a private comfortable waiting room when you come to testify. If you need assistance in the meantime, it is made available.

But enough of the past. What about now? During this campaign, we will be discussing issues. I offer two of them now:

Community Can Assist The Substance Abuse Program

The Mayor's Report

Virginia Beach Mayor
The Honorable
Meyera Oberndorf

The Comprehensive Substance Abuse program began almost seventeen years ago on April 2, 1972, when the first drug abuse service in Virginia Beach was established - the Virginia Beach Drug Outreach Free Clinic. Supported by federal funds and staffed by volunteers, Outreach offered a 24-hour crisis hotline and crisis intervention counseling for persons involved with drugs.

In 1974, a unit for the training and education of agencies and the general population of the city in drug abuse prevention and intervention was added, and, in 1976, Outreach expanded to provide services for alcohol abuse. At this same time, Outreach became a city program under the guidance of the city's Community Services Board. Now, the Comprehensive Substance Abuse Program provides an array of prevention, early intervention, treatment and rehabilitation services.

CSAP offers a wide range of substance abuse services to all Virginia Beach citizens, including non-resident military members and their dependents, who live within the city's boundaries. Services are offered without respect to race, color, religion, country of origin, or ability to pay.

CSAP has three primary service units designed to meet the substance abuse needs of specific populations.

Adult Outpatient Treatment Services staff, located in Pembroke Six, are available to provide individual and group therapy and substance abuse education for persons 18 and older. The staff also provides emergency screening and evaluations for substance abuse clients during normal working hours, with Crisis Center and CMHS Emergency Services back-up needed. In addition, clients are reviewed for possible referral to contracted residential programs, as appropriate.

Intensive Services, also targeted for adults, is available through two sites. ALCARE, an intensive, four-week structured day treatment program, provides substance abuse education, individual and group counseling, vocational assistance, and daily participation in AA meetings. Currently, this program operates at Pembroke Six.

Teacher Empowerment - Just What Does It Mean?

The VBEA Report

By Clair Polley,
President of the Virginia
Beach Education Association

Education's latest buzz word is teacher empowerment. The Virginia Education Association had a conference on the topic recently and the attendance was double that of past conferences. What does this new buzz word mean? Why do people want to empower teachers and why are some educators resisting? Empowerment is the buzz word, but, the operative word is professionalization. Teacher empowerment is transforming the working environment in schools so that teachers act and function as professionals and are treated as professionals.

Not everyone in school systems perceive teacher empowerment in the same light. Across America, there are school board members, superintendents, supervisors, school principals, and even teachers who perceive that empowerment only will lead to diminishing the authority of the principal and/or superintendent and/or the school board. These people see this loss of authority also as a loss of control. If school organizations actually worked like classic organizational theory (based upon military and religious hierarchies) suggests, the loss of authority would be dangerous. But schools and school systems are much more complicated than the classic organizational theory we use to try to explain and understand them.

An interesting example of the difficulties of gaining empowerment took place quite unexpectedly this year in the Virginia Beach system. In an annual survey of teachers, several complaints surfaced that teachers were being asked to attend faculty meetings after school hours without advanced notice. Teachers, like everyone else, have obligations after their workday at school and have trouble rescheduling (limited access to telephones) these obligations to attend a faculty meeting at the last minute.

The system already had a rule which said that "advance notice of faculty meetings, including time of meeting and matters on the agenda, will be given." The problem only surfaced on the survey in a small number of schools and the committee of teachers felt that if the rule could be clarified to define advance notice as 24 hours of a day's notice, the conflict experienced and potential conflict could be avoided in the future.

The rule clarification proposal didn't work. Ironically, the 24 definition had been used informally by the Deputy Superintendent for a number of years. Nevertheless the proposal was rejected at first by saying, "Just name

James Madison - "Father Of The Constitution"

By Lillian Youell,
Virginia Beach Constitution
Consultant

When asked to name the Founding Fathers, Americans seldom mention James Madison. Yet it was he above all who shaped our system of government. His thinking and scholarship are reflected time and again in our documents of freedom.

What better time to recall his contributions than during this bicentennial year of the formation of the government under the Constitution, and during this week of his birthday anniversary. This fourth president was born on the 16th day of March, 1751, in Port Conway on the Rappahannock River; but he lived on the Orange County plantation, known as "Montpelier." This mansion was opened to the public for the first time on March 16, 1987.

His biographer, Irving Brant, wrote, "To know what ultimate position James Madison will hold in this country's history one must know what that country's future will be. If the American people abandon the rights and liberties he worked so hard to establish, he will be forgotten along with them... If they are maintained and cherished, the memory of James Madison will be as enduring as the mountains at which he looked so often across field and forest from his Virginia home."

John Adams said of Madison's presidency, "Notwithstanding a thousand faults and blunders, his administration has acquired more glory and established more union than all his three predecessors - Washington, Adams and Jefferson - put together."

What was so remarkable were his heroic accomplishments in spite of the fact that he had none of the traits associated with heroes. Of small stature and unimpressive in appearance, he was called, "Little Jimmy." He lacked the majestic bearing or physical prowess of Washington. Often in ill health during his early years, he seemed frail. In an age of great orators such as Patrick Henry, he was self-conscious of his weak voice.

But when it came to scholarship and mental acuity, he was considered a giant among men. According to Robert S. Alley, University of Richmond professor and author of "James Madison on Religious Liberty," Madison was the architect of religious freedom in America and helped define the boundaries between church and state.

Serving with George Mason on the committee to draft the Declaration of Rights for Virginia, it was Madison who strengthened the statement about religion beyond mere "toleration" to include the words, "all men are

Comments Accepted On Refuge Proposal

Public comments will continue to be accepted during completion of an environmental assessment (EA) proposing to expand the Back Bay National Wildlife Refuge, Northeast Regional Director Ronald Lambertson said.

Although the closing date of the original comment period was extended from January 20 to February 28, the Fish and Wildlife Service will consider additional comments from interested citizens until March 31.

Completion of the EA will proceed during March. The service has already received a number of comments on a draft EA. These comments along with any additional ones in March will be addressed in detail in the EA, which will be released in April. The document will then remain open for public comment another 30 days until a "decision of record" is made by the regional director.

The EA addresses threats to important fish and wildlife habitat within the southeast portion of the city of Virginia Beach and outlines four alternatives for protecting fish and wildlife resources, including land acquisition by the service. The "Proposed Action" alternative recommends establishment of a land acquisition boundary of approximately 6,400 acres within which lands (or interests in lands) could be acquired for inclusion into the National Wildlife Refuge System. The proposed boundary includes brackish marsh, forested swamp, and low-lying agricultural fields and woodlands important to wildlife.

Lambertson stressed that if proposal is approved and an acquisition boundary is established, there would be no additional controls placed on landowners within or adjacent to the boundary other than existing federal, state, and local laws and regulations already in place.

Additional comments on the EA should be sent to the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service (RE), One Gateway Center, Suite 700, Newton Corner, MA 02158.

ROWS Of Tidewater Hold Spring Fashion Show

Although the members of the Retired Officers Wives Society (ROWS) of Tidewater are for the most part senior citizens, golden girls, or merry widows, their organization is only "Sweet Sixteen" this year.

In the spring of 1973, Jeanette Maygarden announced a "Dutch Treat" luncheon to be held at the Officers Club on the Amphibious Base, Little Creek, for wives of retired military officers. Some told her it couldn't be done. That it had been tried before without success. Thus, she was delighted when 78 women showed up and agreed to form a club.

Most of the charter members, who joined that first year, are still active in ROWS, which has now grown to over 500 members from Norfolk, Virginia Beach, Chesapeake and Portsmouth. The objectives are to stimulate love of country and the flag, to promote fellowship among the membership and to contribute time, effort and funds toward charitable and civic projects.

Hope Scherrer, the current president, points out that this organization has helped many retirees adjust to their new home. "Our members once enjoyed being actives in wives clubs when their husbands were on active duty, but no longer feel a part of the clubs for wives of active-duty officers. Our interests are different now that our husbands are retired and the children are out of the nest."

Many of those who have chosen the South Hampton Roads area as their retirement home had never been stationed here. Thus, ROWS has provided a way for newcomers to meet those in similar situations. The club offers bridge, bowling, golf, tours, evenings at the theater, and many other activities. A lot of women have formed lasting friendships through ROWS.

Monthly luncheon meetings are held on the second Thursday of each month. The March meeting was a spring fashion show, held recently at Holiday Inn - Greenbrier in Chesapeake. Fashions were presented by The Clothes Closet of Virginia Beach.

This program was planned by Betty Steere, first vice president. Members of ROWS who served as models were Martha Cotton, Ginger Davis, Betty Pajuf, Doris McCullough, Georgia Miller, Thelma Morrison, Betty Rinaldi and Eve Skinner.

In addition to social activities, ROWS has contributed funds to many worthy civic and charitable causes. During this club year, a check for $500 was sent to the Officers Wives Club in Naples to help rebuild the USO, which had been bombed by terrorists a year ago. Another donation was made to the Veterans Hospital in Hampton for the purchase of a VCR.

Membership in ROWS is open to wives and widows of retired Commissioned or Warrant Officers and to retired women Officers of the United States Army, Navy, Air Force, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, and the Public Health Service. For further information, call the membership chairman, Mary Vose, 499-7295.

Youth and Family Services staff provide a wide array of services to youth and their families. Treatment services include outpatient individual, group and family therapy, as well as substance abuse education, all offered at Pembroke Six. Also available at Pembroke Six is a more intensive after school Adolescent Structured Day Program for high risk, substance abusing 12- to 18-year-olds who need more than one time per week counseling sessions.

A variety of residential and inpatient services are available through contracts with local private providers for adolescents who need detoxification and/or substance abuse rehabilitation services in a residential setting.

Youth and Family Services also provides prevention and intervention staff who work with individuals, groups, schools, agencies and businesses in an attempt to prevent substance abuse and to assist youth who are considered at risk for alcohol and other drug use to seek help.

Fees vary depending on the type of service offered and the ability of the client to pay. Fees may be adjusted according to income, family size, and special needs. CSAP will file for insurance if any is applicable and adjust the balance if necessary. No client is ever turned away because of inability to pay.

The community can assist this program in two ways. The first is through donations of time. CSAP has an active volunteer program which utilizes the assistance of people with a wide variety of talents, abilities and motivations. The second way the community can help is by remembering who we are and what we do, supporting us in the community, and making those who might need us — friends, neighbors, family, or employees aware that we are here to serve.

make it apparent to others that there is a problem. "Things that were pretty basic are now difficult for them," said Kieffer Davis.

The disease can take as little as two or as many as fifteen years to incapacitate its victim, according to Kieffer Davis. "Generally, the younger a person is when they develop the disease, the more quickly the disease progresses," said Kieffer Davis.

Depression is another common symptom of Alzheimer's disease, said Kieffer Davis. "You'll see them (victims) dropping out of social situations because they'll forget names and it's embarrassing for them," she said. "It's extremely hard on the caregivers because the support systems begin to disappear."

Eventually, victims forget how to walk, in many cases. Becoming bedridden, victims are much more susceptible to infection and generally die of pneumonia, according to Kieffer Davis.

The Alzheimer's Association of Hampton Roads provides a program to the caregivers of Alzheimer's patients. In-Home Respite Care is a service which provides a companion to relieve the caregiver twice per week, four hours at a time, noted Kieffer Davis. "Caring for a person with Alzheimer's disease is extremely draining," Kieffer Davis added.

Also provided as a service to the families of patients are support groups. "Families are able to get practical information as well as emotional support," said Kieffer Davis. A professional also attends each support group meeting to answer questions and to refer other services to family members.

The following is a reproduction of a poem printed in the March Alzheimer's Association newsletter. The poem, title unknown, was discovered by the author's son, John Hopper, while preparing Agnes "Wee" Hopper, a Chesapeake resident to move into a local adult care home.

I don't have a dog, or a mouse
I live alone, in my little house

The sun shines in, and the days go by —
The flowers fade, and so will I.

Little by little, less and less — Can I hold on, to happiness.

Meanwhile I know, that I must smile —
And carry on,
this last long mile.

Walk America is an event that attracts individuals and teams of walkers who want to help a worthy cause and have fun, said Fennell. "It gives people a chance to get out and have fun and raise money," she said.

"Companies are discovering these walk events are a way to get employees together to do something socially," added Fennell. "It establishes comradery with employees at the office."

The Virginia Beach course is 9.3 miles long (15 kilometers) and will be lined with water checkpoints and portable restroom facilities, according to Fennell.

Following the walkathon, hot dogs and Pepsi will be provided. A live band may also provide entertainment on the beach.

Fennell suggests walkers wear loose clothing, comfortable shoes, sun visors and sunglasses. She also points out that hard-soled shoes should be avoided.

And for those seasonal walkers, Fennell suggests early preparation. "The (walkers) should start preparing themselves now if they don't walk on a regular basis."

Refuge

Zeamer said that the large numbers of tourists who visit the refuge's beach during the month of March through October concerned refuge officials. "If you have several hundred people frolicking on the beach, the shore birds will not come in to feed or rest," she said.

She said that the refuge has approximately 100,000 visitors a year, with about 62,000 between March and October.

The refuge employees are concerned about all shorebirds, but are particularly worried about the piping plover, a bird which was listed as threatened on the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service Endangered Species List in January 1986.

According to Zeamer, there were only 700 nesting pairs of piping plovers on the Atlantic coast in 1986. "It is still on the list and will probably remain there a while," she added.

Piping plovers usually nest in May or June, with a re-nesting period in July.

The idea of closing a portion of the refuge for the protection of shorebirds' habitat came from other refuges that have implemented the program, Zeamer said. A refuge in Chincoteague, as well as one in Rhode Island have utilized the idea.

The project has gone over "very well," Zeamer said. Refuge officials have made an effort to educate the public as to the need for this measure.

"There is a lot of on-foot interpretation with the public, such as handing out flyers," Zeamer said. "We want them to understand why we're doing this."

Leges said that he sees the closure as "an opportunity for the public to 'take pride' in the Back Bay National Wildlife Refuge by supporting this critical effort to preserve wildlife habitat. By slightly adjusting our activities to do what we can help ensure the survival of wildlife species of future generations to enjoy," he said.

Zeamer stresses that the closure affects only one mile of the total 4,600 acres of the refuge. She said that this measure is mainly designed to "return the area to a natural environment."

equally entitled to the full and free exercise of religion."

Madison's "Memorial and Remonstrance," written in 1785, helped propel Jefferson's Statute for Religious Freedom through the General Assembly of Virginia. For the first time in western civilization, religious liberty was established by law. Later, Madison incorporated these ideas about religious freedom into the First Amendment.

It was Madison who persuaded Virginia in 1786 to call the Annapolis "Convention." Although only twelve delegates came from five states, his participation in discussions concerning interstate trade helped produce the report, which set the place and date for the Federal Convention the following year.

In preparing for that crucial Convention of 1787, Madison delved into the histories of ancient republics and confederations, reading hundreds of books sent to him by Thomas Jefferson, then Ambassador to France. Thus, Madison was the best prepared of any delegate. The Virginia Plan, which he drafted, was presented to the Convention by Governor Edmund Randolph and became a blueprint for the Constitution.

Next, he joined Alexander Hamilton and John Jay in writing "The Federalist Papers," considered among the classic expositions of the American Constitution. In fact, Madison wrote 29 of the 85 essays, beginning with his first contribution, the famous Federalist No. 10.

"What is government itself," he asked in Federalist No. 51, "but the greatest of all reflections on human nature? If men were angels, no government would be necessary."

Those Federalist articles were written to explain the new form of government and to encourage ratification of the Constitution by New York. But they were widely read and quoted throughout the country during the heated debates. Largely through Madison's efforts, Virginia narrowly ratified the Constitution, 89 to 79, on June 25, 1788, becoming the tenth state to join the Union.

Though defeated in his campaign to become one of Virginia's senators to the First Congress, Madison was elected to the House of Delegates when he agreed to propose amendments to the Constitution to guarantee individual rights. During the first session in 1789, he fulfilled his promise and introduced a Bill of Rights, which became a part of the Constitution upon ratification by Virginia in December, 1791. Clearly, Madison earned the title later accorded him, "Father of the Constitution."

Published after his death, notes he had carefully kept during the Constitutional convention — on his own initiative and unofficially — were another legacy from this great man. Today, as the principal source of knowledge about the debates and proceedings of that convention, they are considered a national treasure.

It took Irving Brant six volumes to cover the active life of this man of many talents, but two paragraphs in this column will mention a few accomplishments other than those associated with the Constitution. Thomas Jefferson, his neighbor and friend, called him "the best farmer in the world." Madison made his plantation pay while Jefferson's was going broke, yet whom do we consider the Master Gardener?

Jefferson is called the founder of the University of Virginia and that is carved on his tombstone. Yet how many Virginians realize that it was Madison, more than anyone else, who helped develop the plans for this "academic village?" He was a charter member of the Board of Visitors, a fund-raiser and lobbyist in the General Assembly on his behalf. After Jefferson's death, Madison became rector of the university and devoted most of his last decade to seeing that it endured and fulfilled its mission.

Largely because of Madison, the State Commission on the Bicentennial of the United States Constitution can proudly proclaim, "The Constitution has Virginia written all over it!" Thank you and Happy Birthday, Little Jeremy!

Collapse Rescue Team Trains In Pungo

Photos by Pam Royal

"Rubble," a golden retriever who went to Soviet Armenia to assist in earthquake search and rescue efforts, searches through the rubble of a collapsed building at the Pungo Coast Guard Station in search of a "victim" during training exercises.

Members of the Tidewater Regional Trench and Collapse Rescue Team and the U.S. Disaster Team canine unit prepare to search a collapsed building.

The Tidewater Regional Trench and Collapse Rescue Team recently held disaster training exercises in Pungo. The Tidewater rescue personnel, with the help of local rescue squads, worked with dogs on the U.S. Disaster Dog Team for the first time.

The dogs are specially trained for search and rescue work. In addition to extensive obedience training, each dog must be certified for wilderness searches before it can begin to train in disaster-type situations.

you some names right here in public of some people who will not be voting for Paul Sciortino this year or at any time.

Jesse Calvin Smith: Convicted murder, rape and breaking and entering by the commonwealth's attorney's office -- won't. He was sentenced to two life terms plus 25 years in the Virginia State Prison.

William Carl Davidson won't. Charged with capital murder, robbery and use of a firearm, he was sentenced to life plus 51 years in the Virginia State Prison.

Thomas Wayne Hobbs won't be hanging around the polling places this year or anywhere else for that matter. Charged with murder, robbery and use of a firearm, he's got 112 years to finish first.

Paul Garner won't be passing out campaign flyers on election day. Charged with murder and breaking and entering, he's got two consecutive life terms to serve first.

William James Hollie: Charged with murder and arson, he's serving 90 years in the Virginia State Penitentiary.

Albert Jay Clozza won't be marking any ballots with my name on it. Charged with capital murder, abductions and sex-related crimes, he's got to finish serving three life sentences plus a death sentence first.

Some criminals have called me the "Street Sweeper." I've been called other things. But tonight, I feel that the "Street Sweeper" is the one name I have earned.

Daniel Webster once said: "Justice...and the law...is the great interest of man on Earth...It has honored us; may we honor it."

I believe that very deeply. That's why I've spent over 25 years in law, 19 of those as a prosecutor and over six years with the FBI, because of my belief in justice and the law, particularly for innocent victims.

My message tonight is this: We must all expect no less than Daniel Webster. We all make mistakes, and I've certainly made mine. I will be and should be held accountable for them.

But I will not apologize for my vigorous pursuit of justice or my affiliation with some of the finest public servants in this or any state. I stand tall for my record and may party.

I ask you tonight to join with me to help me continue my work as your Commonwealth's Attorney so that I can continue to put away the likes of Hobbs, Garnet, and Hollie and their ilk so the citizens of Virginia Beach can remain safe and secure.

Thank you for coming. And I thank you for your confidence and support. I'm proud to be a Virginia Beach Democrat.

The rule clarification proposal didn't work. Ironically, the 24 definition had been used informally by the Deputy Superintendent for a number of years. Nevertheless the proposal was rejected at first by saying, "Just name the schools and we'll take care of it." The teacher committee couldn't do that because the information about the problem didn't come forward with "rat on my principal" authorization; and secondly, in those school where advanced notice was a problem, there were other management problems as well. One of the most common being, "If you go over my head you'll pay."

The second rejection came by suggesting that the effected teachers should file a grievance. Teachers don't like to file grievances.

There are over 3,000 teachers and "rules" are broken every day in schools; yet, the system processes only a handful of grievances each year. The grievance procedure was instituted to thwart collective bargaining, is confrontational in nature, and takes forever. Advance notice of faculty meetings is important, but a teacher would have to be insane to file a grievance.

The third rejection came in the form of tying the hands of the building principal. The rule clarification would unnecessarily hamper managerial prerogatives. The teacher committee members couldn't believe the resistance to the proposal and dug in their heels. This rejection of the proposal held all the way up the chain of command, including the school board.

Except in cases of emergency, which was part of the proposed rule clarification, everyone agrees that a manager should be competent enough to give advance notice of meetings and tell those who are to attend the meeting what matters will be on the agenda. Yet, to mandate good management practice through a system-wide rule, was considered a usurpation of authority and could not be tolerated. The problem, difficulty in rescheduling outside obligations, and one possible solution was totally lost because of the perceived "power grab."

Professional working conditions, including consideration of employees' schedules, are serious factors limiting the professionalization or empowerment of teachers. Little things, like access to the telephone, secretarial assistance, and office space can and do have a profound effect on the way that teachers behave and perceive their status. It does no good to tell someone they are a professional and then treat them as if they are not.

Easy-To-Install Acoustical Ceilings Solve Noise And Decorating Problems

Any time is a good time to tackle indoor household projects. Perhaps one of your do-it-yourself projects is doing something to reduce the noise that frequently erupts from your basement, attic or spare room, while also giving those rooms a fresh, finished look.

Maybe it's the basement where your son's rock band practices, or the room where your daughter and her friends practice cheerleading routines. Or possibly the noise-maker is you with your power tools, or the guys who get a little too boisterous during the weekly round of poker.

As you may be in a quandary as to how to go about reducing noise while giving those rooms a smart, decorative uplift, your local building supply center has what you need. Your challenge is knowing what to look for in matching product specifications with your job requirements, so you need to select products that perform at a price that makes sense.

USG Interiors, Inc., manufacturers of a broad line of acoustical

Choosing An NRC-Rated Acoustical Ceiling

Knowing how to gauge the NRC (Noise Reduction Coefficient) rating your room requires is an all important first step in getting the results you want. An NRC rating of .75 or .85, typically the highest available for residential use, does not mean noise is cut by the same amount. It simply means that in standardized laboratory testing, the ceiling actually absorbed about 80 percent of the sound directed to it. Yet, because our ears have the ability to adjust to an enormous range of noise levels, it takes about a 90 percent reduction in noise energy before our ear registers a 50 percent reduction in loudness. So, an NRC .85-rated acoustical ceiling provide approximately 40-45 percent sound reduction to our ear. However, there are several other factors that affect how much noise reduction you can expect.

Is Your Room Hard, Medium Or Soft?

How much you can reduce the noise that typically comes from your room depends greatly on what is or is not in the room. Almost all room surfaces have some sound absorption properties. Curtains and drapes, carpeting, underpadding, upholstery fabric, chairs, bedding can all add up to a substantial amount of sound absorption. On the other, if you have a room with many hard surface areas lending to strong acoustical reflections and a distinct echo, you need to keep this in mind when selecting the NRC rating of your acoustical ceiling.

Selecting Ceiling Style And Performance

A wide selection of acoustical ceilings are available. The trick is

How You Can Give Your Kitchen Excitement With Wood

Looking for an inexpensive way to add eye-popping appeal to any room in your home?

If so, decorative wood moulding may be your answer.

Wood mouldings are among the least expensive, most versatile, readily available and easy to use building products, according to Georgia-Pacific Corporation, the nation's leading manufacturer and distributor of building materials.

The earliest recorded use of wood moulding was to hide poorly fitted joints in crudely built structures. Ancient Greeks elevated mouldings to an art form and embellished their classic columns with them.

Today, wood mouldings are enjoying renewed popularity as easy do-it-yourself projects to enhance a home's appeal. The uses for decorative mouldings are practically endless.

Mouldings give rooms a finished look. They add depth and interest to walls, ceilings, doors, windows, cabinets, or even fireplaces. And keep in mind that wood moulding applications need not be limited to large-scale projects.

Moulding can provide the crowning touch to wainscoting, decorative wall panels, room dividers, planters, picture frames, trellis work and even toys. The use of moulding is limited only by your imagination.

There are also many practical applications. Base mouldings protect walls from being damaged by mops and brooms; chair rails protect walls from being dented by carelessly-moved chairs and furniture. You can be as creative as you wish with decorative mouldings. Apply them vertically, horizontally, diagonally, or combined with paneling, wallpaper or fabrics. Stain wood mouldings to bring out their rich grains and textures. Or paint them to blend or contrast with their surroundings. Other exciting decorating ideas with wood mouldings can be found in G-P's 24-page color booklet, "Moulding Makes It More..." The booklet shows a variety of moulding styles used throughout the house and also offers instructions showing how to measure, install and finish your own

Guidlines For Planting Functional Landscape Trees

Introduction

Trees planted around homes, public buildings, commercial industries, and along town and city streets fill several needs. They fill a need for shade, a need for screening, a need for softening the harsh and stark lines of buildings, and a need for adding beauty and graciousness and a feeling of welcome to streets that otherwise are purely functional.

For trees to do their intended job satisfactorily - and continue to do it - they must be selected carefully and watched closely until they become established. Once established, they require less attention.

From a homeowner's perspective, most everyone wants ornamental trees around their property to make it more attractive. But many people do not realize that good trees provide other benefits and have many more uses around the home and yard.

For example:

1. They increase land values. Landscaping adds to the resale value of the property -- a well planted, properly maintained property may have its original value increased from ten to fifteen percent. Such a property is also easier to sell.

2. Trees provide a great deal of shelter. They give shade from the hot sun, they eliminate much of the cutting force of strong rains and winds, and they retain moisture in the soil.

3. They can be used to screen unsightly objects or to frame and accent pleasing views and garden features.

4. They help secure privacy by providing eye-pleasing barriers, borders, and hedges.

5. Trees can enrich a pleasant feature in the garden by forming a contrasting background for that feature.

6. They can help prevent soil erosion on steep slopes and banks.

Where To Plant - Fitting Into the Plan

The space of distance between trees is very important. A landscape changes dramatically, though slowly sometimes, as they grow. While spacing depends on your objectives, the site, and the growth habits of the trees to be planted, you should anticipate their mature sizes and avoid planting them so close together or so close to buildings, walks, and driveways that removal or pruning will be necessary when they mature.

What to plant, rather than where to plant, is the question most often asked; but what you plant often depends on where you want to do the planting. When you are deciding where the planting should be done, keep a number of things in mind such as:

• Eye-appeal and design. Well placed trees will add to the attractiveness of a house or building and its setting. Most often they will look their best behind the house at the corners. A house of predominantly vertical lines or features can be made to appear lower if trees with rounded forms are planted around it. In the same manner, a low, spreading house will appear taller if trees that have columnar or pyramidal shapes are planted.

• Trees for shade. Shade may be one of the most important factors to consider when landscaping with trees. Leaf size and the density of a tree's canopy determine the amount of shade it will provide. Large shade trees are tall enough to shade the roof of a two-story house. Medium-sized trees are large enough to shade the roof of a one-story dwelling or the walls of a two-story building. Small trees will shade an outside wall of a one-story house.

• Boundaries or borders. Trees for hedges or border plantings often do well and add to the overall

A Heated Argument For Converting To Gas.

If you've ever run out of hot water in the middle of a shower, you know the problem. But did you know that natural gas is the solution?

When you have a gas water heater, recovery time is so fast you're virtually assured of an endless supply of hot water for bathing and washing clothes or dishes.

That fact alone could save a lot of arguments around your house. And here's a fact that could also end some arguments about money. Natural gas, with all its comfort and cleanliness, costs around one-third less than what you've been paying.

For more information about converting your home to gas, or if you're building a new home, call Commonwealth Gas or your qualified gas contractor.

And never again will you get steamed over someone using all the hot water.

appearance of a home site if they are planted along the property lines. In this way they provide an enclosure which offers an individuality to the property and its setting within the neighborhood. Also, such plantings may be designed to screen the whole property or specific parts or structures therein.

- Trees with unique characteristics. Specimen or accent trees may be used in the landscape because they possess some outstanding characteristics such as flowers, fall color, berries, bark color, or unusual foliage. Such trees can be used to enhance the overall attractiveness of a property.

- Scale. Avoid using large trees in big groups on small properties and small trees in small groups where the land area is large. If the area is large and the house is larger than average, then large trees, either as individual specimens or in groups, are in keeping with the scale. A planting of this type on a small lot and near a small house will monopolize the area and leave little or no space for outdoor living or circulation about the residence.

- Problem areas. Planting trees under utility lines, in narrow spaces between the street and sidewalk, and over underground utilities, sewers, or septic drain fields may cause serious problems. If the wrong species are improperly placed in such areas, roots and branches might cause service utilities to malfunction. If such areas must be planted, seek professional assistance in species selection to insure success and avoid future problems.

Sources Of Trees

Most of the trees used for landscaping homes, businesses, and public areas are procured from nurseries that specialize in the production of plants well adapted to a given area. In addition to nurseries, there are many garden centers that offer similar selections of landscape trees.

Trees also may be obtained from their native environments; these are referred to as "collected trees," "native species," or "wildlings." If collected trees are chosen for planting, open-grown specimens are harder and easier to dig than those growing in dense woods.

Native trees, however, do not have the compact root systems or symmetrical branching habits that nursery-grown trees have. Nurseries also offer a wider selection of trees, especially those slower-growing types whose smaller mature sizes make them desirable for small home grounds. Another advantage of nursery-grown trees is that they often have their roots pruned to stimulate compact root systems that make them easier to transplant. In addition, nursery-grown trees are better because they have been properly trained, watered, and fertilized.

Types Of Trees

Trees can be purchased in three different forms: bare-rooted, balled and burlapped (B & B), and container-grown.

Bare-rooted trees (Figure 1) are usually dormant, small, and deciduous. They can be transplanted successfully without a ball of earth around their roots. They should be planted in the late, fall, winter or early spring while they are still dormant. Bare-rooted stock that has broken dormancy and has new growth of more than two or three inches should not be bought or planted. Evergreen plants, except seedlings or very young plants, should never be bought or transplanted bare-rooted.

Balled and burlapped (B & B) trees (Figure 2) are dug from the nursery row so that their roots remain in balls of soil; roots and soil are then wrapped in protective coverings of burlap. All trees, regardless of their sizes, can be transplanted balled and burlapped. Many of the larger trees, and especially the more difficult to transplant species, should be moved with a ball of soil.

out the year without damaging their roots.

The tree type (bare-rooted, B & B, or container-grown) and the species determine the best time to plant. Bare-rooted trees should be planted while they are dormant -- in the early spring before growth starts or in the fall after their leaves have fallen. Balled and burlapped trees may be transplanted throughout the year. However, the risk of losing trees moved with a ball of soil is greatest during the summer months, and maximum care should be exercised.

Container-grown plants may be planted any time the ground is not frozen. Summer planting requires watering if the weather is dry.

With the use of mechanical tree diggers, Virginia landscapers are planting trees almost year-round. The only time they are not planting is when the ground is frozen.

After trees are purchased or dug from their native environment, the roots must be protected from drying. This precaution is especially important with bare-rooted trees. Soaking the roots of bare-rooted trees for 30 to 60 minutes before planting will insure rehydration of the roots. The soil on a B & B or container-grown plant should be watered enough to prevent drying.

If the plant has leafed-out or is evergreen, protect the branches while it is being transported. If you let the tops of the plants protrude through the end of a station wagon, an automobile window, car trunk, or pick-up truck, the leaves, needles, and branches will lose much valuable moisture.

Plant the tree as soon as possible. If you have to wait, protect it from exposure to drying sun and wind in a cool, sheltered, shaded area. If the roots are bare, keep them moist by planting them temporarily in moist sand, sawdust, peat moss, or soil. The soil of B & B or container-grown trees also should be kept moist.

2.5 Million Tourists Spent $521 Million Last Year; Eight Percent Increase Expected This Year

By Lisa Richardson

With Easter only a few days away, the official beginning of the tourist season can only be around the corner. While this means increased traffic, crowds at the beach and wait lines, it also brings precious revenue into the Virginia Beach economy, according to Jim Ricketts, the city's tourism director. The hospitality industry brought in an estimated $521 million to the Virginia Beach economy in 1988. Revenue from the tourist industry is increasing at an average rate of eight percent per year, according to tourism department records.

Ricketts attributes Virginia Beach's popularity among tourists to the large size of the beach and the diversity of its attractions. "We're a beach within a very large metropolitan area," said Ricketts. "That's what sets us apart."

Virginia Beach's prime competitors are Myrtle Beach and Ocean City, Ricketts said. But Virginia Beach has the advantage over these also popular resort areas. "Our tourism is the only game in town,"

The importance of keeping the beach standards up are key. It's the front porch to your city. - James Ricketts, Virginia Beach Tourism Director he said. "We have more attractions besides our beach," such as museums and a brand new soon-to-open arts center.

The Typical Virginia Beach tourist:

- Average age 35.3 years old.
- Average income $41,736.
- Two out of three are married.
- 37 percent have children under the age of 13.
- 22 percent have children between the ages of 13 and 18.
- Over 20 percent are professionals/owners.

During the warmer months, Virginia Beach residents become extremely popular among family and friends.

"Out Of The Surf"

New Shipwreck Fuels Discussion Of Creating Reflecting Pool Beside Life-Saving Museum Of Virginia

By Karen Dalrymple Staff Writer

It wasn't remains from the "U.S.S. Minnow," but it could very possibly be the remains of the "Francisco Bella Gamba," a ship which sailed from Genoa, Italy in 1878 and wrecked 12 mile off Cape Henry.

"We're narrowing down a dozen wrecks to the Francisco Bella," said Angus Murdoch, executive director of the Life-Saving Museum of Virginia at the oceanfront. "It's a possibility."

The northeaster that blew through Virginia Beach last week generated much wave action, causing pieces of the shipwreck to wash up on the beach at Fort Story. According to Murdoch, 52 feet of the starboard side of the ship was uncovered. Half of the side of the 125 - 150 foot ship is surprisingly in good condition.

"The condition is so good. It indicates that it was buried pretty thoroughly. It has very few barnacles on it," Murdoch said.

The ship appears to be of European construction, made of oak and fastened with copper, bronze and oak trenails. The ship's stern, uncovered at Fort Story following a severe storm in 1983, is on display outside the Life Saving Museum.

"This piece is well worth saving. It's a very large piece. It's unusual to find one of this size in its condition." - Angus Murdoch.

Murdoch said individual timbers and ribs from the ship have also washed ashore, but the stern is the last significant piece that's been discovered.

The shipwreck, which is officially the property of the federal government, will most likely be preserved, if "it's technically possible." Murdoch said John Broadwater, the state's underwater archaeologist, and his assistant Bill Morris, along with lead scientist/archaeologist Paul Green of Fort Monroe, are working on a solution to preserving the wood.

"This piece is well worth saving. It's a very large piece. It's unusual to find one of this size in its condition," said Murdoch.

He said the first step to saving the wood would be to get it off the beach. The most logical way, he said, would be to build a tunnel under the wreck and put a crib under it, then lift it with a crane from directly above.

"It's just a matter of finding the available equipment and funding," Murdoch said.

Pet Store Owner Relives The Worry And Tension When Rare Birds Valued At $2,849 Were Stolen

By Karen Dalrymple Staff Writer

Sharon Goodman said the thieves stole the birds for money but from the way the cockatoo and conures looked when they were returned, they wouldn't have been worth a dime.

"They were disgusting. They wouldn't have been able to sell them anyway," said Goodman, assistant manager at Pet Paradise in the Pembroke area, where four rare baby birds, a $1,499.99 cockatoo and three $449.99 conures, were recently stolen.

Cody C. Bedford, 19, of Woodshire Apartments charged with grand larceny, and his two juvenile accomplices who also face charges, broke out the glass front door of the pet store after trying the back door first, according to Goodman. Aside from stealing the birds, Goodman said they've discovered a calculator missing and possibly an adding machine. No money was stolen from the store.

The stolen cockatoo suffered from a broken toe.

"It's amazing the way they did it," Goodman said of the burglars.

As she fed the 5 1/2-week-old cockatoo and the three- to five-week-old conures their peanut butter, monkey chow and Gerber baby food concoction, Goodman expressed her feelings of loss while the birds were gone.

"I wasn't so mad as I was upset. It's like having a child kidnapped. They're so defenseless,"

Virginia Beach's Third Division Of Motor Vehicles Office Is Located Near TCC; City's Continued Growth Spurred $1.4 Million Addition

By Lisa Richardson

As Virginia Beach has grown, so has the need for another DMV (Department of Motor Vehicles) location, according to Betsy Edwards, public information director for the Commonwealth of Virginia Department of Motor Vehicles.

The new 10,000 square-foot facility, located at 3551 Buckner Boulevard near TCC, is the city's third DMV. Due to the influx of more and more people into the area, according to Edwards, a new facility is needed.

Virginia Beach residents can now access the DMV Monday through Friday between the hours of 10 a.m. and 7 p.m. and on Saturdays from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. "We can serve the customer better with these hours," explained Edwards.

Northern Virginia currently has five branches operating with similar hours, according to Edwards. "The citizen response has been very positive," said Edwards. Like Northern Virginia, Virginia Beach is a metropolitan area where people commute back and forth to work.

Edwards and other officials at DMV expect the new facility to be well received by residents because of the convenience factor. "It

The total cost to the city for land, site improvement, construction and equipment was $1.4 million.

Old Donation Center Planning Concert; Only 40 Will Be Accepted Into September Program

By Lisa Richardson

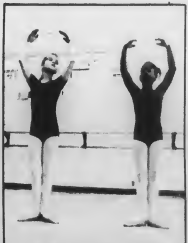

Reading, writing, Arithmetic and dance? It isn't exactly the way it was way back when, but to many students and instructors at the Old Donation Center for the Gifted and Talented, it is better.

The Dance Department at Old Donation Center provides a creative outlet for students and an alternative to private dance classes, according to Noelle O'Donnell, a dance instructor at the center. The school's annual spring concert will be held June 4 at 3 p.m. at Green Run High School. Admission is free. The public is invited.

"Our program is different from a dance school," said O'Donnell. "Our students learn ballet, jazz, theatre, history of dance, history of theatre, anatomy, nutrition and careers in dance. The students don't come in here and just dance for four hours."

The dance department at Old Donation, which is now accepting applications for the 1989 fall semester, is under the direction of O'Donnell and Karen Buchheim.

While the center receives numerous applications each year, only 40 will be accepted into the program to begin in September. The deadline for submission is May 1 and applications can be obtained through each home school.

The program, which is for rising third, fourth and fifth graders, does not require previous dance experience, stressed O'Donnell. Dance

Malbon Picked To Do Neptune Festival Poster

By M. Annette Garcia

This year's Neptune Festival artist, Robbin Malbon, says her work gives her a "great sense of personal worth."

Malbon, a Kellam High School graduate, has been a Beach resident since fourth grade. She and her family moved from California. Malbon loves the area, her neighbors, and her neighborhood. "My neighbors are great," she said.

The Princess Anne Hills resident is a busy woman. She juggles her time between her family and her love for art. She describes her art as "something that's just me." She says it allows her to be something other than just a wife or mother.

Malbon's parents are retired and live in Oregon, and she is close to her sisters, Denise Kight, and Diane McCaughy. Both are dental assistants. One lives in Fairfax and the other resides in King's Grant. In fact, Malbon once tried her gifted hands at dental assisting for a period of time. "I hated it," she said.

She describes her art as "something that's just me." She says it allows her to be something other than just be a housewife or mother.

Malbon said her childhood was normal. She traveled a lot because her father was in the Navy. She didn't like all the moving around because it meant changing schools too often.

The former Kellam High School cheerleader landed her first real job as a cashier. While in high school she was also active in drama.

Malbon stepped into the world of art later in life. Although she attended James Madison University in Harrisonburg, it wasn't until she enrolled in art classes at Tidewater Community College that her artistic inclinations took off. Malbon said there was one teacher, Steven Wolf, who really took an interest in her work and encouraged her a great deal.

Malbon met her husband, John, at a local restaurant. They dated for about three years. Malbon says his losing a bet to her on a Redskins game led to their 13 year marriage. He's the president of Papco oil company.

Several different things inspire Malbon and her work. She tries to capture the moods and expression in people. One way she does this is by actually going out and taking snapshots of people and things.

"Wheels are turning," she said about her ideas on the upcoming Neptune Festival poster, which she will be designing. She's not quite sure what it's going to look like because a theme for the festival hasn't been set yet.

Her work has been featured in a number of places. Her creations have been featured in several one-person shows in southside Hampton, on the Peninsula and in Richmond. She won numerous prestigious awards, including several at past Virginia Beach boardwalk art shows, Virginia Beach Arts Center Members shows and from Virginia Watercolor Society juried shows.

At present, she is preparing for a two-person showing to be held in Richmond. The showing will take place in May and will consist of 10 to 15 pieces of her work. Malbon's typical day begins with her taking her children to school. She has a 12-year-old son, Josh, and a 9-year-old daughter, Clara. Malbon describes her family as a "tight unit."

She normally spends three days out of the week drawing and sketching in her studio at home. She does this until about 3 or 4 p.m. Then it's time for her children. On Wednesdays she tries to get down to a studio in Norfolk which she shares with about eight other artists.

Shipwreck Could Be Very Educational

It may not be the Titanic, but remnants of a shipwreck that washed ashore at Fort Story last week sure is becoming a talk piece in Virginia Beach.

After all, the ship, which possibly came from Italy over 100 years ago, went down less than one mile off of the beach. It's amazing that a century later, a vessel decides to surface, and in fairly good condition.

Because the wood was buried under so much sand all these years, it has been pretty well preserved. The main concern now is how to prevent the wood from drying out. Several suggestions have been made, including keeping the wood submerged in water. The director of the Life-Saving Museum, which deals specifically with shipwrecks, suggested putting a reflecting pool outside the museum so visitors could get an up-close look at the wreck, if an when the remains are moved to the museum. There are also several other pieces, presumably from the Italian vessel, that would be included in the pool.

The Life-Saving Museum would be the perfect location to put such an artifact. During the tourist season, such a large, unusual and interesting display would attract many people. Plus, seeing the shipwreck and learning about its background may be very educational.

Hopefully, the experts who are working with the uncovered ship will come up with an idea that will lead to preserving the shipwreck. Maybe another storm will blow through the beach and the rest of the ship will surface. - K.L.D.

Arts Center's Grand Opening On April 8

This article was submitted by the Virginia Beach Center for the arts.

With the Grand Opening theme, "Take Another Look," the new Virginia Beach Center for the Arts opens to the public on Saturday, April 8.

The institution has served as the hub for the arts in Virginia Beach for 37 years. But with the unveiling of the new building comes a change in every aspect of the institution's operations, from focus and outreach to facilities and offerings.

The history of the Center traces back to 1952, when Virginia Beach was a small resort community, not the Commonwealth's largest city that it is today. The founding of the Virginia Beach Arts Association was by a group of local artists committed to promoting and exhibiting local works of art. Little did the group know that their efforts would lead to the single arts institution in southeastern Virginia to focus on 20th-century art, the largest private school in the area, and the organizer of one of the largest outdoor art exhibits of its kind in the country.

The group's first major venture was an art exhibit in 1955 along the Virginia Beach Boardwalk, an event that has grown each year in profile, scope and size. Last summer more than 375,000 spectators attended the four-day Boardwalk Art Show, which posted sales of $600,000 for the works of more than 300 artists nationwide.

In 1971, the Association evolved into the Virginia Beach Arts Center, with an expanded commitment to teaching classes in various art media in addition to holding exhibitions. Over the past 18 years, the studio arts school has grown to become the largest private school in the area, with about 120 classes and a summer "ArtCamp" offered annually to 1,400 adults, children and students. Two years ago, Old Dominion University certified selected coursework for college credit.

In 1975, the Arts Center moved to its Arctic Avenue address, a 5,000-square-foot facility designed as a World War II Army USO building. Despite the many challenges with space and security in the aging building, the Center built a regional reputation for its curatorial work. Highlights of exhibitions in recent years include "Escobar, Martin, Mischenko," works by multi-media illustrators; "Non Traditional Western Art," which included the work of seven local and western artists; and "Energetic Fiber," featuring the works of nationally prominent and local textile artists. The Center has also participated in national traveling exhibitions, including "Fired with Enthusiasm," 60 soup tureens by leading North American ceramic artist which was organized by the Campbell Museum in Camden, N.J.

The planning and Capital Campaign for the building that opens to the public on April 8 was announced six years ago. Michael J. Marks, executive director since 1985, cites the vision and efforts of the Board members, Capital Campaign committee and the State and Virginia Beach governments as instrumental to the project's success. Today, the $7.5 million funding for the project includes all of these sources in addition to hundreds of individuals and corporations throughout Hampton Roads.

Ground breaking for the building occurred in July 1986, following the selection of E. Verner Johnson and Associates, Inc. as architects from among 47 national proposals. The Boston-based museum architects and planners have designed more than 90 museums internationally.

The institution announced a name change two months ago, prior to the operational move to the new building. Marks said that the new name, the Virginia Beach Center for the Arts, is symbolic of the new outreach and expansion of purpose for the institution. "Our new building is much more than a physical relocation," he added, "it involves a transformation of mission and design to a museum-standard facility devoted to all aspects of the art produced in our century, and to reaching all sectors of our region," he said.

The new building is nearly seven times larger than the previous one. New art receiving and storage area, electronic intrusion protection and environmental controls, all of which are built to museum standards, make collaboration possible with lenders and institutions internationally. The new 268-seat auditorium, in addition to the Interior and Sculpture Courtyards, offers new programming areas which in turn allow for expansion into the performing arts. Increasing the number of classrooms three-fold, all professionally equipped, offers the opportunity to double studio arts and art history classes.

"The opening of our new building invites the public to take a new look at the Virginia Beach Center for the Arts," Marks added. "Our history includes many significant achievements. But the future will offer the best 20th-century art in our galleries, in addition to expanded lectures, programming and events, that provide a new and very valuable resource to the community."

Easy Access

Located across from the Pavilion Convention Center at the east entrance to the Virginia Beach-Norfolk Expressway (Route 44), the Center for the Arts is open Tuesdays through Saturdays from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m., and from 1 p.m. to 5 p.m. on Sundays.

Extended hours will be offered in the summer. Admission for non-members is $2 for adults, and $1 for children and young adults age 6 to 18. For more information, call 425-0000.

The Virginia Beach Center for the Arts is a non-profit, private organization founded in 1952 and committed to the presentation and education of 20th-century art through exhibitions, the studio arts school and special programs.

Provide Plants With Balanced Fertilizers

Plants take up nutrients continuously throughout their growing season in Virginia Beach, so it is beneficial to provide them with a balanced fertilizer.

Perhaps the most efficient way to achieve this is to apply a slow-release fertilizer, which releases nutrients at the same rate they are taken up by the plants over an extended period. Slow-release fertilizers contain one or more essential elements.

Slow-release fertilizers can be categorized by the way in which the nutrients are released. The three major types are 1) materials that dissolve slowly, 2) materials from which the nitrogen is released by microorganisms, and 3) granular materials with membranes made of resin or sulfur that control the rate of nutrient release from the granules into the soil.

Rock phosphate is an example of a material that dissolves slowly. The availability of the phosphorus depends on how finely the material is ground and how much phosphorus is already in the soil. Slow-release fertilizers which provide potassium are granite dust and greensand. Like rock phosphate, the availability of their primary nutrient (in this case, potassium) depends on the fineness of the material. Dolomitic (agricultural) limestone is a slow-release source of magnesium and calcium. In addition to supplying the nutrients, it also raises soil pH.

Bloodmeal and cottonseed meal are two slow-release sources of nitrogen. In breaking down these compounds, soil microbes produce plant-usable forms of nitrogen. Soil temperature determines the activity of the soil microorganisms and consequently, the availability of the nitrogen in bloodmeal and cottonseed meal.

Sulfur-coated urea is a slow-release fertilizer with a covering of sulfur around each urea particle. Different thicknesses of sulfur control the rate of release of nitrogen which becomes more rapid as temperature increases. Watering does not affect its release rate. Sulfur-coated urea applied to the soil's surface releases more slowly than it does if it is incorporated into the soil. This material generally costs less than other slow-release fertilizers and it supplies the essential element, sulfur, in addition to nitrogen, phosphorus and potassium.

When fertilizer products coated with multiple layers of resin come into contact with water, the layers swell and increase the pore size in the resin so that the dissolved fertilizer can move into the soil. Release rate depends on the coating thickness, temperature, and water content of the soil. There is often a large release of fertilizer during the first two or three days after application. Release time can be from 0 to 6 months depending on the coating. This is noted on the package.

Sulfur-coated urea has been used as turf fertilizer, while resin-coated fertilizers are predominantly used in container growing and potted plants.

Slow-release fertilizers have several advantages for the gardener, the plants, and the environment. Since they need not be applied as frequently as other fertilizers, they save the gardener time. They have a low burn-potential as the nutrients become available over time. Plants may use the nitrogen in slow-release fertilizers more efficiently since it is continually being released over a longer period than conventional fertilizers. This is particularly valuable with perennial plants. Also when nutrients are released slowly, they are less likely to wash into water sources and pollute them.

The disadvantages of slow-release fertilizers must be considered, too. They are generally more expensive than other fertilizer types. Since their release rate is governed by factors other than plant need (such as microbial activity or soil moisture), nutrients may not be available during critical growing periods. This can be a factor in the cool days of early spring with slow-release forms of nitrogen since the nitrogen release depends on active microorganisms. Caution should be used in applying slow-release fertilizers around trees or shrubs as they may keep the plant in growth late in the summer. The late season growth may not harden off completely and excessive winter damage may occur.

Bird-Stealing Shows Desperation

Thieves allegedly stole four innocent little birds to sell and receive for money. Although the birds cost of $2,000 total, they would think thieves would go for a VCR or television or maybe a car. But birds?

The poor birds, which are safe and sound back at the pet store from which they were stolen, were only gone for about three days. From the look of them, though, they were not given the best care. One bird's toe was broken and the smallest of the four had his head caked in baby food. An unsuccessful attempt to feed it, obviously.

The birds not only were neglected, but they were kept in tiny boxes with not much room to move. One would think that if the birds were meant to be sold, they would be cared for in such a way that would make them desirable to buy.

The birds are now being nursed back to health at the pet store. The cockatoo has a small "cast" on his toe, but he'll be okay. The birds are for sale, but won't be sold until they are healthy again.

It just goes to show how desperate some people can be. Some people will do anything for money. It's just a shame that the suspected thieves are so young. Stealing the birds may have been fun and games for them, but a criminal record isn't. - K.L.D.

Central Library Is A Sign Of Excellence

The Virginia Beach Central Library is a facility in which we, as a city can take great pride. One of 124 buildings around the world to be selected, the library is a finalist in the American Consulting Engineers Council's annual Engineering Excellence Awards competition.

While congratulations are certainly in order for The Design Collaborative, architects; William C. Overman Associates, civil engineers; Old Dominion Engineering, mechanical, electrical and plumbing consultants; and Stroud, Pence & Associates, Ltd., structural engineering consultants, as well as others involved in the building of the facility congratulations must also go out to the city of Virginia Beach.

Virginia Beach was in need of a functional, resourceful central library. Through the efforts of Library Director Martha J. Sims, city council and the citizens of Virginia Beach, the central library became a reality.

Not only was the library a great idea, but it was a well-executed idea as well. No wonder Virginia Beach is one of the fastest growing cities in America. People and businesses know a great place when they see one. - L.A.R.

Easy Access To New DMV

Now that we have 24-hour grocery stores, pizza delivery until 2 a.m. and banks with extended weekday and Saturday hours, it seems only natural that the community have a DMV with easy accessibility.

It's nice to know that the state has finally realized that there is not enough time in a lunch hour to tackle the long lines and frustration one can experience in a trip to renew a driver's license. Many Virginia Beach residents work 9-to-5 jobs which leave little time for errands on most days. Since it's our tax money that goes to build facilities like the new DMV, it only makes sense that we be able to use it when we need it.

Here, here to the city for giving us more time to put off getting our new inspection stickers, address changes and renewals. We'll have a lot less frenzied looks on our faces as we smile for the picture we'll carry for the next four years. - L.A.R.

EEO Advisory Committee Works For City Employees

The Mayor's Report

Virginia Beach Mayor
The Honorable
Meyera Oberndorf

"An Equal Opportunity Employer" - this is a phrase with which I'm sure we're all familiar. Within the past year, the city of Virginia Beach has taken two important steps to ensure the validity of that claim. First, the Personnel Department hired an Equal Employment Opportunity/Affirmative Action coordinator; and, secondly, the Equal Employment Opportunity Advisory Committee was formed.

The committee consists of nine employees, each representing a different EEO category, such as, administrative support, service maintenance, professional and skilled craft. The employees either volunteered for the committee or were recommended for it by their department head. They will serve two- or three-year terms. Their primary function is to act as a forum for employees who need to express concerns on equal opportunity issues. Committee members are committed to ensuring that all people are treated equally and given the same opportunities.

The committee will act as a forum for employees and the members have high hopes that employees will respond. I guess you could say the committee serves as a "pipeline" between employees and the administration. Employees finally get an opportunity to tell administrators exactly how they feel about policies and procedures as they relate to employment. Employee issues/concerns are discussed at the committee's monthly meeting where information is passed on to the EEO/AA coordinator.

In addition to acting as a means for employee ideas and concerns, the committee will make recommendations on city policies. Committee members recently reviewed and recommended changes for the city's new

Is Our School Funding At Its Proper Level?

The VBEA Report

By Clair Polley,
President of the Virginia
Beach Education Association

The school board is taking a fiscally conservative approach in its proposed 1989-90 operating budget of $255.5 million. Once costs for growth and inflation are factored out of the $31 million new dollars ($16.6 million local, $2.2 sales tax, $12 million state), only modest increases are being requested by the school board.

For over twenty years, the Virginia Beach schools have been in an unenviable position. Not only has the system been considered a very good school system academically speaking, but the system has been considered a very good system in regards to efficiency. The system has been able to brag about per-pupil costs hundred of dollars below neighboring school division and the entire state's average per-pupil costs, which include the wealthy school divisions of northern Virginia.

There have been two types of criticism of this bragging. One criticism, coming from public school advocates like VBEA, has been that the low per-pupil costs were mostly due to the highest, or near highest, class size ratios in Virginia. The advantage to the taxpayer was actually a disadvantage to the children. In the late 70's, the system argued that class size really didn't make a difference, but research has finally caught up to the common sense of teachers, principals and parents and no one can escape the reality that class size does make a significant difference. The school board is now trying to lower class size, but in a conservative fashion by prioritizing and lowering class size where it will have the most effect; grades one and two.

The second criticism has been that these per-pupil costs didn't reflect the capital outlay and debt service costs being experienced in Virginia Beach and other fast-growing school divisions. This criticism was accurate in the past. The per-pupil costs released by the local school division and the state only included operating budget costs. This year the budget office made an extra effort to include debt service and capital outlay costs in the comparison between state average per-pupil costs and Virginia Beach per-pupil costs. The bottom line is that Virginia Beach is still $550 below the average per-pupil costs for the state of Virginia.

Corporal Punishment Of Students Banned At Beach

By Lillian Youell,
Virginia Beach Constitution
Consultant

Sadly, mistreatment of children has existed throughout history and in almost all cultures. While attending the mid-year meetings in Denver of the American Lawyers Auxiliary, held in conjunction with the American Bar Association, I heard a most informative talk about abused, battered, and neglected children.

The speaker was Hendrika Cantwell, M.D., pediatrician, Denver Department of Social Services and Associate Clinical Professor, University of Colorado Health and Sciences Center, who has gained national and international acclaim for her contributions in the diagnosis and treatment of child physical and sexual abuse and neglect.

Dr. Cantwell reminded us that these problems go back at least 4,000 years, mentioning Bible references such as "Spare the rod and spoil the child." She then talked about the first reported court case of child abuse in the United States.

Before 1875, U.S. authorities had no legal means to interfere in cases of battered children. The laws were changed with the help of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals (SPCA) in the case of little Mary Ellen, who was whipped daily, stabbed with scissors and tied to a bed.

The little 9-year-old girl was indentured to Francis and Mary Connolly. Possibly she was the daughter of Mary's ex-husband. In any event, in This action was long overdue and Virginia Beach can be proud that two of our own delegates, O'Brien and Crshaw, were patrons of this bill.

1874, neighbors reported the situation to Etta Wheeler, a church worker, who was appalled to find there was no lawful way to rescue the child from her brutal guardians. She went to Henry Bergh of the SPCA for help.

Using the argument that the child was a member of the animal kingdom, the SPCA obtained a writ of habeas corpus to remove Mary Ellen from her home. Pitifully thin and with a scissor wound on her cheek, she was carried into the New York Supreme Court, where her case was tried. Mrs. Connolly was sentenced to a year in prison, little Mary Ellen was given a new home, and the following year, the New York Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children was incorporated!

The battering of little Mary Ellen took place in the home, but the tradition of beating a child into submission was also prevalent in some early schools. Flogging a student for failure to render a proper recitation in class was common in England. Today, in our country, spankings have become

Council Disputes Over Rural Areas Of The City

A north-south dispute developed as to farmer-council members to hold options open for the rural areas of the city.

Councilman John A. Baum, Blackwater farmer, charged the greater part of his colleagues with not getting involved and leaving the issue to him and Councilwoman Barbara Henley, a Pungo farmer.

The ramifications of development south of the green line was discussed at a work session and in an executive session before the council continued with the issue at the formal council session recently. At that time council referred to the Planning Commission alternatives to consider as interim solutions to control growth in the rural areas until long range policy is adopted with the revision of the Comprehensive Plan. Planning Director Robert Scott told council that the revised plan will take about 12 months to draft.

Most of the affected area is zoned AG-1 (Agricultural) where dwellings are permitted by conditional use permit and AG-2 Agricultural where dwellings are permitted by right on lots of one acre or more. Even after eliminating lands impacted by poor soil, according to consultants Rogers, Golden and Halpern, the city's consultants on the feasibility of a transfer of development rights (TDR) plan 9,000 to 10,000 lots are available for development in the AG-2 area.

At the same meeting, however, council put off until next week a decision on whether to have Rogers, Golden and Halpern, in association with Siemon, Larsen and Purdy update the comprehensive Plan for areas south of the green line. The study would also provide information requested by the General Assembly during deliberation of a House Bill which would have given Virginia Beach the authority to develop a TDR program. The Assembly decided to appoint a committee to study the program but appropriated no funds for additional consultants. The study would cost the city as much as $245,000.

Councilwoman Reba McClanan had said that she had asked if the city could do most of the work in-house and was told it could. She said she felt "insulted" that with the conception that someone from out of town know the area better than she does. "I don't like consultants planning one part of the city," she added.

When Mayor Meyera Oberndorf suggested appointing a council committee consisting of Henley, McClanan and Councilman John D. Moss to work on the plan, Baum objected because, he said, McClanan and Moss were not farmers and did not understand the problems.

McClanan objected, saying she was raised on a farm.

As a result of the flare-up, no action was taken on the committee.

Henley agreed that the $245,000 fee was a lot of money, but not when compared to $750,000 appropriated for "one little sewer project" to serve 44 homes. "That's the kind of think we'll be doing in my part of the city and in John's (Baum's) part of the city if we don't do something now."

She said that the subject got a hearing from the General Assembly only because of the quality of work done by the consultants. She said a consultant was needed to get a job done as quickly and as thoroughly as possible.

Council owes the people answers, she said, "the best possible answers for planning the future of one-third of the city."

Baum said to avoid having happen in the southern part of the city what has happened in the northern part, "I'd rather put up a fight."

Apparently referring to discussions in the executive session, he said, "You're basically leaving it to us (Baum and Henley) and not getting involved at all."

Henley said that people in the city may want to continue farming but if they have to sell they must get the most for their land. If they have to relocate they must get on with their plans. She said in the past the city has been criticized for not making long-range plans. Council owes it to the city, she said, to provide better than a "default" plan.

Vice Mayor Robert E. Fentress said that he realized Baum and Henley felt lonely down there.

Henley said that purchasing development rights is a great idea and that TDR is not intended to increase density but to determine where development should be located. But the idea is, however, she said, is to keep all options open.

Mayor Meyera Oberndorf said that Henley has been conscientious in votes concerning all parts of the city while trying to maintain agriculture in the southern part of the city. She said that the reason to return to TDR or PDR (the purchase of development rights) is that the city won't have to be concerned about where the density will be. She said that "some wanted council to reduce the amount of farmland." "But I recognized farming was unique . . . I did look to you (Baum) and Mrs. Henley for direction . . . This is our city. That's why we're elected at large . . .

Those of us are willing to meet halfway if we recognize the concerns of other citizens." She said that she would like to preserve agriculture but would like to do it in as extreme and final way possible.

Earlier Oberndorf had said that she was concerned about the 25-year limit for tying up developable farmland under the TDR program. "If we're going to protect the (agricultural) industry we need to protect the industry in perpetuity," she said.

Councilman Harold Heischberger pointed out that in a New York case the court struck down a TDR program because it was in perpetuity but the other programs in the country have had no problems.

Oberndorf said she wanted all the people to be protected.

McClanan said the city has all these studies done and does not follow any.

Henley said that if the city does not preserve agriculture, the other side of the coin is that the city will have to program some dollars for infrastructure needed for development. "If we're going to have building and one-acre lots, we're going to spend dollars."

Oberndorf said that council will have to make a commitment next week when it considers a resolution on the consultant.

She then suggested a council committee to take a "hard look" at all proposed changes and reevaluate them.

Said Baum earlier, the people don't understand the difference between agricultural and residential property. He said that agriculture is a valuable resource and that if it has to give way, it should be done in an orderly fashion. The people, he said, are mutilating the country. They want to move there and once they do they want to change it. He charged a lack of understanding of

Planning Commission To Study Rural Development Options

The resolution adopted by city council requests the Planning Commission to study options regulating development in the rural parts of the city. The Commission was given 30 days to return with recommendations.

Interim options prepared by the Planning Department include:

- No action.
- A conditional use approach -- require use permits for residential use in AG-2 as well as AG-1 districts of the city or abolish the AG-2 District and rezone all to AG-1 so that use permits will be needed for all residential development.
- Minimum lot size -- increase the minimum lot size in AG-1 and AG-2 districts from one acre (three acres where soil conditions require more land) to at least ten acre, possibly more, creating a disincentive to development.

• Overlay approach -- recommended by TDR consultant, Siemon, Larsen and Purdy, this approach would set a very large minimum lot size for planning of future lots but would exempt farmers as opposed to those deriving the majority of their farm income from non-farming sources. This approach is seen as more sensitive to the needs of the current farm population.

• Moratorium -- under Virginia case law, not acceptable.

• Case-by-case subdivision review -- this approach would reserve for Council the right to review and approve individual proposed subdivisions.

Lynnhaven DAR Welcomes
91 New Citizens To The U.S.

By Carolyn Scullion,
Regent, Lynnhaven parish Chapter DAR

The Lynnhaven Parish Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, recently arranged the "Welcoming Ceremony" to greet new citizens immediately after their naturalization.

The Honorable J. Calvitt Clarke, Jr., judge for the United States District Court Eastern District of Virginia, presided at the Naturalization Court at the Federal Court Building in Norfolk. Anita Henry, United States attorney, made the motion that 91 petitioners, including six children, be granted citizenship following their oath-taking.

Each stood and gave his or her name and country of origin. Their previous lands circled the globe. More than thirty countries were represented from the West Indies, Central and South America to our neighbor to the north, Canada, from European countries such as Great Britain, Poland, Denmark, Portugal, Hungary to Far East countries of Cambodia, Japan, Korea, China and Taiwan. Others named Libya and Afghanistan, but the largest number had called the Philippines home. Of the six children who were naturalized with a parent taking the oath on their behalf, Marcus and Lan Van from Viet Nam are both students at Bayside Junior High School. Priti Patel's parents were from India, but she was born in England. Reynaldo Joracion of the Philippines attends Norview Middle School. Mary Jane and Mary Grace Aguilar were also from the Philippines.

Forty-five of the new citizens reside in Virginia Beach. For an alien to become a United States citizen, he must take an oath of allegiance, not to the flag, nor to the government, nor to the president, but to the United States Constitution, renouncing allegiance to his former country. Judge Clarke administered the Oath of Citizenship following the introductions.

Cavalier Society DAR Holds
State Conference At Sheraton

By Justine Sheldis,
Senior President, Cavalier Society

The State Conference to the Virginia State Chapter of the American Revolution was recently held at the Sheraton Beach Hotel on 36th Street.

The Cavalier Society, Children of the American Revolution, was the host society. Jeffery Sweeney, Virginia state president, and Mrs. Stewart E. Huddleston, senior state president, presided over the conference. A total of 21 members, seniors, and guests attended the conference.

On the opening of the conference, Grace Myers, president of the Cavalier society, greeted the crowd. Virginia Beach Mayor Meyers Oberdorfer welcomed members from all over Virginia. Next, a slide show about the local Marine Science Museum was presented. After Lillian B. Youell, a member of Lynnhaven Parish Chapter, former chairman of the Constitution's Celebration Commission of Virginia Beach, and columnist for The Virginia Beach Sun, spoke on "Our Documents of Freedom" during the welcoming ceremony.

She quoted Catherine Drinker Bowen, the distinguished lecturer and author of "Miracle at Philadelphia," The United States Constitution provided for neither class nor privilege. All was mobile. A man could move up, or he could slip down. It was a wholly unprecedented departure, and to Americans both immigrant and native-born, it gave extraordinary scope. Neither the Declaration of Independence nor the Constitution claimed to make timid men courageous, lazy men active or stupid men bright; they unlocked doors and let Americans walk through, each one to his own destiny.

In reminding the new citizens that the Constitution constitutes us one people, Mrs. Youell concluded, "While you bring the traditions of many countries with you, you also come with the purpose of leaving those countries behind as you have just stated in your oath. Give America what is best of their spirit, but do not look back over your shoulders and seek to perpetuate what you intended to leave behind. Become Americans."

Other members of the chapter who participated were Rose Bennett, Judy Connors, who displayed a framed naturalization certificate which had been issued to her grandfather in 1896, Ann McCrary and Barbara Striffler, who serves as chapter chairman of the Americanism and DAR Manual for Citizenship Committee.

The Naturalization Examiner, Elaine Brooks, distributed the naturalization certificates. Each petitioner was given an American Flag by the DAR and a copy of the Bill of Rights by Ron Budson of the Sertoma Club of Norfolk.

The meeting was recessed, members attended a candidate's party, where candidates for state officers and the upcoming national convention were introduced.

Elections were held on Saturday morning; the meeting was adjourned. Virginia Beach trolleys busied members and guests to the Virginia Beach Marine Science Museum for the tour.

Saturday evening boasted the formal Awards Banquet, for the presentation of awards for contestants entered throughout the year. Cavalier Society was named Second Best Society in the State. The Fort Chiswell Society of Wytheville, won Best in State by a half a point. Cavalier Society won many other awards also.

Next the Cavalier Society is off to the National Convention, on April 21 to 23 in Washington D.C.

$60 Fish Investment Didn't Pay Off

By Phyllis Johnson
Special To The Sun

The ad said, "Two free goldfish just for walking in." It seemed like a good deal. The kids had wanted a pet, but we didn't want the expense and upkeep of a pet of the canine or feline type. So we went to the store to get the fish and the necessary items to care for them.

Before it was all over, we had shelled out about 60 green ones. And it all looked so simple. It didn't take me long after the purchase to find out that the aquarium needed as much attention as a human child. The water had to be dechlorinated and the spongy filter needed rinsing off occasionally - totally stinky. The initial investment was so much that we had to put out $35 for a top so some of the olympic-bound fish wound up like raisins basking in the sun.

I thought I would be conservative on ornamental touches so I plucked some greenery out of a few silk flower arrangements to decorate the tank. It looked attractive and it was less expensive than buying aquarium plants. I felt really pleased with myself.

A few days later, I noticed that some of the fish were turning black in spots and looked a little swollen. Then, to beat all, they began acting abnormal, looking bulge-eyed, and swimming upside-down and backwards. I was dumbfounded. What could I have done wrong? I fed them the little fishy chow, de-chlorinated the water, and kept a check on the filter. I consulted a friend of mine that owned four or five tanks of the scaly creatures and she advised me to remove the silk plants that were probably full of fire retardant.

I followed her advice, but unfortunately three fish had already gone to the goldfish gates but two had survived the fatally attractive ferns. Realizing that they were nameless, I dubbed them Mike and Glenn.

I had no more problems with the fish and in time forgot the incident of the unusual aquatic disabilities. Then, one night on the Tracey Ullman show, there was a cartoon about a hysterical office worker calling someone to help her fish that were swimming backwards and upside-down.

My husband turned and looked at me and I swore that I didn't have anything to do with it.

This year's theme, "Tropical Fever" is expected to attract more than 700 residents of Virginia Beach, Norfolk and other Tidewater cities to this annual exhibition of the hospitality industry.

The event, which alternates between Norfolk and Virginia Beach each year, is a popular event, according to expo coordinators. More than sixty exhibits will display everything that hotels and motels, as well as restaurants, schools, hospitals, nursing homes and government offices need for operation from French bread to furniture, pool services to telecommunications.

The purpose of the expo is to give visibility to associate members and to hospitals, schools, and rest homes who use their products

City Considers First Building Fee Increase

By Lee Cahill
City Council Reporter

The City of Virginia Beach is considering its first increases in ten years in development-related fees. City Council referred to the Planning Commission for review and recommendations ordinances which would increase fees to a level that will more closely match the cost of the services for the city.

With its present fees, the city overall recovers 32 percent of the cost of development-related activities. Under the proposal, the city would recover 45 percent of the cost upon adoption of the ordinances, and 56 percent after July 1, 1990.

Using 1988-89 costs to the city for development-related activities of $8,010,113, the city would recover $11 million more during the first phase of the new fee structure and $1,850,000 during the year starting July 1, 1990.

The increases would be greater -

$1,353,413 and $2,385,148 - except for an adjustment in fee income because of a projected slowdown in development activity.

At present the city recovers a total of $2,621,207 of the cost.

Patricia Phillips, director of the Office of Research and Strategic Analysis for the city who presented the report on the fee structure at a recent work session, said that other Virginia localities, such as Fairfax, Loudoun, Chesterfield and Henrico/Counties regularly increase development review fees to cover more of the cost of providing development review fee services from the users. Localities in surrounding areas, however, she said, have fees similar to those currently in use in Virginia Beach.

Council expects to act on related ordinances not requiring Planning Commission recommendations on April 17 and on those requiring Planning Commission recommendations on May 15.

City Manager Aubrey V. Watts Jr. said that before council considers the ordinances, the staff will meet with interest groups and will have public hearings. He said that the city is not talking about recovering all the costs, that the fee increase proposals are not like impact fees.

In answer to a question from Mayor Meyer Oberndorf, Phillips said that in the communities where fees were regularly increased, no change was noticed in development activity - except that development became heavier.

Along with increasing the fees the city, Phillips said, wants to see better control over plans and better services.

Councilwoman Reba McClannan said that the city is taking too long with encroachments. When it takes someone six months to get to put a sign up, she said, she would have "a hard time charging the cost when we're not using time efficiently. Some time frames are unbelievable." Watts said that the city is also looking at "one-stop shopping" to expedite procedures.

Councilman Harold Heischberger said that if the city can demonstrate to the large developers that time will be saved, the developers will have no problems with the increases.

David M. Griffith and Associates, Ltd., consultants, has been employed to review the fee structure developed by the city.

One of the larger increases would be for conditional use permits for which the applicant now pays $125. To reach 50 percent of the cost, the recommended increase is to $1,225 during the second phase ($600 the first phase), except for non-profit organizations which would remain the same, and increase to $350, and home occupations which would remain the same.

Ag Day Recognizes Nation's Fiber Industry

National Agriculture Day provides special recognition of the food and fiber industry's contributions to America.

The celebration of Agriculture Day increases the awareness of agriculture's accomplishments and the challenges it faces in continuing to meet the world's food and fiber needs. National Agriculture Day strives to promote unity in the agricultural community and deliver positive and credible messages about the food and fiber industry to the non-farm public.

In observance of Agriculture Week, Virginia Beach recently held its annual Agriculture Banquet at the Cavalier on the Hill. The banquet provided a time to honor "The Man of the Year in Agriculture," and "Friend of the Year in Agriculture." These people were recognized for their outstanding services in the field of agriculture. "The Man of the Year in Agriculture" is R. Everett Sawyer, and Jack Peoples is this year's "Friend of Agriculture." Both have been very active in the Virginia Beach agriculture industry, as well as the non-farm community.

Sawyer has served on the Virginia Dare Soil and Water Conservation District for 27 years and served as chairman for 20 years. Everett is a longstanding farmer of more than 45 years. He has also served on the Virginia Beach Mosquito Commission. Currently, he is in his second term with the Virginia Soil and Water Conservation Board.

Peoples is another outstanding individual, serving on the board of directors for the Chesapeake Farm Bureau. He has also served on the Virginia Beach School Board for several years. Peoples is the chairman of the Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Society. For 26 years he has been assisting with the Virginia Beach/Chesapeake 4-H Livestock Show. As the nation honors the agriculture industry, we at the Beach area would like to thank Jack and Everett for their outstanding service to the community.

Buy And Plant Your Bulbs Now

Mention flower bulbs and most people think of tulips, daffodils, etc. But there are numerous bulbs or bulbous-type plants which grow well in Virginia Beach and Chesapeake and bloom from summer through fall until frost.

Now is the time to buy and plant most of these bulbs (after danger of frost is past) either by ordering through catalogs or buying locally. Before planting, follow these guidelines:

Soil preparation: Proper drainage is a must for bulbs. Improve soil drainage by adding peat moss, leaf mold or fine mulch. Planting beds should be dug deeply, so that water will drain past the depth the bulb is planted. For example, if you're planting bulbs 6 inches deep, your beds should be prepared and amendments added to a depth of at least 9 inches. Phosphorus is needed when bulbs are planted to encourage root growth - bone meal or 5-10-5 can be added in the soil mixture - A teaspoonful per bulb if planting small areas, 4-5 pounds per 100 sq. ft. (10 X 10) will do in larger beds. If you haven't had your soil tested lately, chances are it's high in acidity. Adding dolomitic limestone will neutralize the soil somewhat; bulbs prefer a soil pH of approximately 6.5.

Planting depths: Most true bulbs and corms can be planted 2 1/2 to three times the diameter of the bulb; rhizomes, tubers and tuberous roots usually have no real general rule - it's important to find out how deep to plant the bulb when you buy it.

After Planting: Be sure to water well and often. Mulching flower beds will help conserve moisture, prevent weeds, and make your beds more attractive. An inch or two of mulch will do - either pine bark (shredded or nuggets), hardwood mulch, or pine straw can be used effectively. Be sure to stake those bulbs which will grow tall (such as gladioli, dahlias) to prevent roots from loosening in the wind.

Once bulbs begin actively growing, a regular program of feeding is needed - a good general purpose fertilizer such as 10-10-10, or specific bulb food is fine. Once a month, apply nutrients either by scratching dry a small amount into the soil around the bulb and watering well, (be sure not to get dry fertilizer on the foliage of plants) or use a water soluble food. A light application is best - don't be heavy-handed.

Selection: Try to suit a bulb's specific needs when planting. Don't plant sunlovers in shade - they'll be unhappy. Also try to accommodate their need for dryness, or damp conditions. Find out what prefers where before buying.

Honoring America's Providers

Agriculture Makes Up Vital Economical Link

It is that time of year when spring planting and preparation for the new farm season to begin.

With this in mind, we turn our attention to National Agriculture Day, March 20, and National Agriculture Week, March 19 to 25. This is a time set aside to provide special recognition of the food and fiber industry's contributions to America.

It is because of American farming that we have some of the lowest food prices in the world. Americans spend less of their income on food than many other countries, and this is due to our highly productive farmland and very progressive farmers.

The hog industry is one of the strongest in the state with about 75,000 hogs being produced annually. The major agronomic crops also fair well in the area.

Corn production for Virginia Beach was tenth highest in Virginia for 1987. This figure is more impressive when Beach acreage is only 2.6 percent of the total Virginia harvested acreage. This feat is accomplished because the farmers in the Beach consistently have some of the highest yielding crops on a per acre basis. Soybeans are an excellent example. The average soybean yield at the Beach has been the highest or second highest average in the state for four of the last five years.

Out of the 37,000 acres devoted to crop production in Virginia Beach, about 2,000 are used in diversified fruit and vegetable production. Virginia Beach is a principal producer of snapbeans, cabbage, sweetcorn, cucumbers, and spinach. The Beach also offers a variety of blueberries, strawberries, blackberries, cantaloupes, and tomatoes among others.

Virginia Beach agriculture adds to the State's agriculture industry, which in turn contributes more than $19 billion to Virginia's economy (84 figures). Approximately 22 percent of the State's gross product comes from agriculture. Employing about 500,000 people in Virginia, the state agriculture industry supplies 22 percent of the work force. These are very good reasons to honor America's providers during Agriculture Week.

Virginia Beach Growline Open

The Virginia Beach Growline, a garden hotline, has begun operation. The service is operated by Virginia Beach Master Gardener Volunteers.

The Growline phone number is 427-8156, and is available 9 a.m. until 3 p.m., Monday through Friday.

WE SALUTE AGRICULTURE EVERY DAY

This month the nation pays tribute to farmers on Agriculture Day. We're pleased to join in that effort, but for us, every day is "Ag Day", because serving the farming community is a full-time, year-round job.

Name another industry that's produced as many changes as agriculture

There was a time when everyone raised their own crops, and they were lucky to grow enough to get by. Today, a single farmer produces enough to feed thousands. At Southern States we consult and help the farmer by showing them the newest improvements and by explaining how they can produce bigger profits.

Central Library Honored; Finalist For Award

By Lisa Richardson

The Virginia Beach Central Library Building, built to allow bright sunlight into interior spaces and withstand hurricane coastline force winds, is a finalist in the American Consulting Engineers Council's 22nd annual Engineering Excellence Awards competition, the nation's most prestigious engineering competition for new and innovative designs.

"People are impressed by the architectural style," said Martha J. Sims, director of the central library. "It (day lighting) makes people feel good inside."

Stroud, Pence & Associates, Ltd.

the Virginia Beach consulting engineering firm on the project, has already won contests at the state level and is now competing against 123 other entrants, including the largest butterfly conservatory in North America located near Atlanta, Ga. It is also competing against the newly renovated Abraham Lincoln home in Springfield, Ill.; a wastewater treatment plan in Lexington, Ky.; and Hong Kong's Bank of China, the fifth tallest building in the world.

According to Deborah Chern, spokesman for the American Consulting Engineers Council, the library makes economical use of natural daylight to light interior spaces by orienting the building's long axis in the east-west direction, and stepping the roof structure every 25 feet to create ribbons of south-facing windows. Roof overhangs maximize heat gain in the winter and minimize it in the summer. Tubular steel trusses and round concrete columns keep the building strong and add to the structure's aesthetics.

The Virginia Beach community responded positively to the unique architectural style of the library, according to Sims. "They expressed amazement that Virginia Beach has such a facility now."

The $8.4 million facility houses over 181,000 items according to library records, including books, periodicals, cassette tapes, video cassettes, and compact discs. According to Carolyn Barkley, central librarian, the facility saved the public approximately $9.5 million last year.

This estimate is based on the cost to consumers of video rental, non-fiction and fiction book purchases and meeting room rental, as well as numerous other sources provided to the more than 167,220 registered users of the central library.

The unique facility and abundant sources are not the library's only strengths, according to Barkley.

"We provide not only strong resources to meet the needs of the community, but we also provide that real vital link, a well-trained staff, between the things on the shelf and the people who use them," Barkley said.

Approximately 2,100 Virginia Beach residents visit the library on a daily basis, according to the library people counter, a device designed to monitor traffic through the facility. The average Virginia Beach resident checks out an average of five to six books per year, added Barkley.

While the facility took only 24 months to construct, according to Richard Fitts of The Design Collaborative, the architectural firm responsible for the overall project, planning began as early as 1983 following the city's purchase of the land.

The Virginia Beach Central Library officially opened January 15, 1988.

The "in loco parentis" doctrine, from which school officials once derived broad authority to deal with classroom troublemakers was challenged in a case Dr. Cantwell cited next. In a ruling in October 1975, the United States Supreme Court upheld the right of a teacher to strike a child.

The sixth grade student, Russell Carl Baker, and his mother brought an action against his school principal of Greensboro, N.C., claiming that their constitutional rights were violated when the student was corporally punished by his teacher over his mother's objections and without procedural due process. Incidentally, the child was frail and was hit with a wooden drawer divider in front of the entire class.

A three-judge District Court held that Fourteenth Amendment liberty embraces the right of parents generally to control means of discipline of their children, but that the state has a countervailing interest in the maintenance of order in the schools sufficient to sustain the right of teachers and school officials to administer reasonable corporal punishment for disciplinary purposes; that the teachers and school officials must accord students minimal procedural due process in the course of inflicting such punishment; and that the spanking of the student in question did not amount to cruel and unusual punishment.

Following this decision, The Charlotte Observer editorialized, "The court's decision adds nothing to the debate over whether the paddle is a suitable educational tool. If it is, what does it teach?...that a person who has the right to inflict temporary pain can maintain discipline and command respect...Children learn from the actions of adults. Do we want to teach them that when peaceful methods fail, rational people turn to violence?"

This ruling did not invalidate state laws prohibiting corporal punishment in New Jersey, Maryland and Massachusetts. The 1972 amendment to the General Laws of Massachusetts states that "the power of the school committee or of any teacher or other employee or agent of the school committee to maintain discipline upon school property shall not include the right to inflict corporal punishment upon any pupil."

Until this year, no such prohibition existed in Virginia. In fact, according to the United States Department of Education's Office of Civil Rights, there had been over 11,000 instances of corporal punishment in Virginia's public schools during 1986. Now, 17 years after the state of Massachusetts took this action, the Virginia General Assembly has taken similar steps, making Virginia the first state in the South to ban spanking of students in the public schools.

With the passage of House Bill No. 1864, which becomes effective July 1, 1989, "No teacher, principal or other person employed by a school board or employed in a school operated by the Commonwealth shall subject a student to corporal punishment." This action was long overdue and Chesapeake can be proud that Delegate Thomas V. Forehand, Jr. introduced and sponsored the Bill.

Affirmative Action Plan. Expected to be available by the end of the month, the plan details ways the city will aggressively work for equal employment opportunities through recruitment of minorities and women for job openings and the formation of the EEO committee. In addition to the EEO/AA Plan, committee members also reviewed the Sexual Harassment Policy, the Discrimination Complaint Procedure and the EEO Policy.

Cultural awareness celebrations will also be sponsored by the committee. I had the opportunity to meet with the committee in February. At that time, I declared February as Black History Month in Virginia Beach and expressed my support of their efforts. Upcoming quarterly events will include Hispanic, Filipino and handicapped awareness celebrations. Another major concern of the committee will be career development. The publication of the job listing column in the employee newsletter was a recommendation made by the committee to help ensure that all employees get information on promotional opportunities.

In addition, the committee hopes to improve career development counseling. The committee has discussed the possibility of expanding the city's tuition reimbursement program to include career counseling to those enrolled in colleges and universities. This is to insure that employees are taking the right courses to accomplish their career goals.

The EEO committee is working for employees. This is the employees' opportunity to resolve problems within the workplace. I strongly encourage the city's employees to help members do their best to represent them by letting them know how they feel.

I applaud the city's efforts in emphasizing the importance of equal employment for everyone.

Malbon

On Fridays for the past year, she has had a model come to her home to pose for her and three other artists. "Sometimes she's nude, sometimes she's clothed or draped," explained the artist.

When Malbon isn't busy being an artist, mother or wife, she enjoys trying her crafty hands at tennis. She also enjoys riding her bike on the boardwalk while listening to her Walkman. She normally rides alone. When the weather gets warmer Malbon bikes on the boardwalk with her family.

How does she feel about being the chosen artist for the Neptune Festival poster? "I'm excited and honored," she said.

Even though he's well occupied with his business Malbon also says her husband supports her art. "He loves being involved even though he's very busy," she said.

Malbon has been to the Neptune Festival like most other beach citizens. She likes the food, surfing contest and especially enjoys the sandcastles. This year, she'll be enjoying more than her usual festival favorites. She'll be able to stand back and enjoy her own work. How does she feel about that? "Real excited," she answered.

"Personal accomplishments is what keeps this artist ticking. 'Every year I set a goal for myself,' she said. What does the artist want to accomplish that she hasn't done yet? "I'd like to get my work into a D.C. and New York gallery," she replied.

she said. "I didn't sleep the whole time they were gone."

Goodman received an anonymous phone call Monday from someone who knew where the birds were, two days after they had been stolen. Goodman said it is being assumed that the birds were taken at approximately 3 a.m. last Saturday, but police weren't notified until 5:30 a.m., when employees at the 7-Eleven across the street noticed the front door was smashed in.

Goodman, who has been working with animals for seven years, said there has been a misunderstanding that the birds, which belong to the pet store, are hers. "They're not my birds. I'm mom. I love these babies. I felt like my kids had gotten stolen."

Goodman said the birds are recovering just fine, although one of the cockatoos' front toes was broken. She's just happy the birds are back safe and sound.

"I doubted we'd get them back," she said.

skill potential, an interest in dance and other evidence presented at May 20 auditions will be the criteria used for selecting students for the coming school year, according to O'Donnell.

Students who attend the center miss one entire day of school per week one morning session and one afternoon session in order to participate in the program and avoid classroom interference, according to O'Donnell.

"Students have to maintain acceptable home school grades, to both parents and teachers, in order to remain in the program," said O'Donnell.

Councilwoman Barbara Henley asked that some consideration be given for conditional use permits required in Ag-1 Agricultural areas for single-family residential construction. She said that is the only classification where a permit is needed for a single-family home.

for dance students, according to O'Donnell.

While a similar program exists in an after-school program for students through the eighth grade, a program for younger children is still in the planning stages, according to O'Donnell. "We've found that in the fourth grade, children are at a good age to start basic physical things," said O'Donnell. "Younger children are not yet physically or emotionally ready for the program."

Younger children need a more creative approach to dance than the more technical program needed for older students, O'Donnell said.

friends, Ricketts chuckled. "If you live in Virginia Beach, everybody and their brother wants to visit you."

The boardwalk's revitalization is important to the growing interest in Virginia Beach, according to Ricketts. "The atmosphere on our boardwalk is very unique," he said.

Clowns, mimes, puppet shows and a courtesy patrol available to answer questions of visitors and residents, are just some of the activities available to all who experience the boardwalk during spring and summer afternoons and evenings, according to Ricketts.

A sign ordinance, which removed signs overhanging Atlantic Avenue last year, is one of the tools the city is using to beautify the beach, said Ricketts. "It's very non-commercial," he said. "It's clean, it's beautiful and it's nicely landscaped." "We don't want it to take off like Atlantic City did at one time," said Ricketts. The importance of keeping the beach standards up are key, added Ricketts. "It's the front porch to your city."

Of the 2.5 million tourists who visit the beach each year, the lion's share comes from within Virginia and states farther north, according to department of tourism records.

Virginia accounts for 25.5 percent of the city's yearly tourist population, with Richmond contributing 8.5 percent. The state of Pennsylvania represents the second highest concentration with 12.8 percent. New Yorkers head for the "world's largest resort city" to represent 12 percent, 10.9 percent of whom come from New York City.

Other state percentages include: Ohio, 7.8 percent; Maryland, 7.2 percent; New Jersey, 5.6 percent; Connecticut, 2.6 percent; Massachusetts, 2.6 percent; and North Carolina, 2.3 percent.

"Traditionally, people do not travel north to go to a beach," explained Flo McDaniel, executive director of the Virginia Beach Hotel and Motel Association. "They travel south."

The tourist season, which traditionally runs Memorial Day through Labor Day, begins Monday, May 29 and ends Monday, September 4.

he said. He added that it would be less costly to use the Army's equipment.

Once the wood is moved, it needs to be permanently stabilized by treating it chemically or keeping it wet, by putting it in water or keeping it under a spray. If it is not kept wet, Murdoch said the bacteria will begin working on it and the wood will dry out.

"I suggested putting it in fresh water at Fort Eustis," Murdoch said.

Murdoch also suggested including the shipwrecks in the 24th Street Park project and providing a shelter for outside artifacts. His first choice, though, would be to invite an architect to create a reflecting pool with an inexpensive filtration system and illumination. Both the stern and the starboard would be displayed in the pool.

"I think it would be a very interesting artifact. It would be very educational," said Murdoch. "The main thing is to preserve what we have now."

According to Murdoch, officials at Fort Story will meet to discuss the future of the shipwreck. A decision should be made by this week.

"It's quite an exciting thing. I was quite surprised anything that large would come out of the surf. This one's a nice little prize," Murdoch said.

Realizing that the Virginia Beach schools will have 68,834 students next year, being $550 below the state average for every student is a considerable amount of money. Were Virginia Beach to have just average per-pupil costs, including building new schools and paying for schools already built, the city would be paying $37,858,000 more to operate the school system next year.

Does this mean that the system should ask for and spend an additional $37 million next year? No, but over a period of years, Virginia Beach is going to have to increase per-pupil expenditures in order to meet students' educational needs. It is no secret that society realized that it must spend more money on educating students that have not been succeeding in schools. Virginia Beach has just started this effort. What the school board also realizes is that the academic opportunity for students who will be going into higher education must also be increased. It is not true to say that the Virginia Beach schools are doing a poor job now, but it is true to say that the rest of the country is going to improve public education and Virginia Beach must stay competitive.

agriculture is a very viable industry. Do we want an agricultural industry in the city? We don't put as much (in the revenues) as the tourist business but it doesn't cost the city as much. I hate to think that all (the produce) will come from Chile or somewhere else. This is going on all over the country. She said she is concerned about the ways, but farmland is a resource, too.

Henley said that the question ends a long-term look, but that the city is faced with the need for short-term guidelines.

Councilman William D. Sessions Jr. said that he has heard reports. Some have said that agriculture in the city would have been dead if the farmers were not permitted to sell some land for $30,000 an acre.

If this is true, said Henley, the whole country would be in trouble. McClean also said that it bothered her that some land in Princess Anne Borough continues to be dumped in with the southern part of the city although the land may be across the road from full-developed property.

She asked whether the city can have different approaches for either side of the green line.

After "quite a lengthy decision making process," the substance abuse subcommittee of the city's Community Services Board has made the decision to endorse a $3,800 methadone treatment pilot project for the city's intravenous drug users.

According to Kathy Balok, program administrator for the comprehensive substance abuse program, the project, which will begin July 1, is part of a six-year planning process with the state Department of Mental Health. The committee has been meeting monthly since September to determine what the needs for methadone are in Virginia Beach.

Seashore State Park and Natural Area is the site of a nine-month comprehensive biological inventory conducted by the Virginia Department of Conservation and Historic Resources, the Natural Heritage Program and the Division of State Parks.

"Seashore State Park is one of the more unique areas in the state," said Gary Waugh, public information officer for the Virginia Division of State Parks. "The information gathered will help us in the management of the park and the environment that's there."

Waugh said five National Heritage Program staff members and approximately 17 biologists from all over the state will participate in the inventory. He said members of the Heritage Program are already on site, but the additional scientists are still under negotiations.

"It's their charge to do inventory of all types of flora and fauna,"

CBS Anchorman Bob Shieffer Speaks On Washington Politics At Pavilion; First Visit To Virginia Beach

By Lisa Richardson

With the laid-back attitude of a college professor rather than the charged presence of a network newsman, CBS Saturday News Anchorman Bob Shieffer recently addressed a crowd of about 800 at the Virginia Beach Pavilion.

The second of three speakers to be featured in the Virginia Beach

Roundtable series, Shieffer spoke of Washington politics as only the chief senior political correspondent covering Capitol Hill could. With topics ranging from negative campaign advertising to the gatekeeping role of the press, Shieffer kept the attention of the crowd in his first-ever visit to the beach.

Used School Buses, Selling From Anywhere Between $200 To $1,600 Will Be Auctioned April 22.

They may be big, yellow and old, but Virginia Beach City Public School buses are in great demand.

"There are a lot of people interested in buying school buses," said Gary Fullerton, writer/reporter in the Virginia public school system's office of community relations.

School bus buffs can get their fill of the oversized pupil transport vehicles at the school board's annual school bus auction, set for Saturday, April 22 at the Transportation Services Department on New York Avenue.

"It's an auction for old school buses and other old vehicles and surplus school equipment," Fullerton said.

Twenty-one buses, eighteen 64-passenger, two 36-passenger and one 54-passenger with a hydraulic lift for the handicapped, will be up for auction this year. In addition, three "junk" buses will be sold.

"You're going to need a truck to haul them away," Fullerton laughed.

David Pace auctions off sewing machines, physical education equipment and other miscellaneous items.

David Pace, director of transportation services for the city's public schools, said last year's auction featured 38 buses, six cars and 12 trucks, making this year's selection "considerably less than what we had last year."

The buses, which are mostly 1970 to 1976 models, have anywhere from 90,381 to 180,065 miles on them. According to Fullerton, "that's normal." The reason being is that buses are often used for more than one school in addition to being used for special

A dog is a man's best friend, or so they say. But according to Sam Staff of the Feline Alliance of Tidewater, cat owners in the United States now outnumber pet owners of any other species, including dogs.

"There are more pet cats in the country than dogs now," she said. The reason? "Because of the lifestyles of people. They're so mobile."

Cats are so popular, in fact, that The International Cat Association (TICA) is again holding its annual 12-Ring Championship and Household Pet Cat Show at the Pavilion April 15 and 16. Staff, who is secretary of her cat club and the TICA cat show, said "it's an organization for people who love cats and to promote their welfare and put on a cat show each year."

Some 200 cats of over 20 different breeds will be "entered in the show for judgement," Staff said.

Former Teacher Johnnie Miller Is Highly Concerned With City's Natural Resources

By Karen Dalrymple
Staff Writer

"We're fast losing a lot of our natural resources and damaging our environment by carelessness and ignorance," said Johnnie Miller, chairman of the Friends of the Francis Land House, an organization involved in helping to furnish the house and promote activities.

Miller said her concern for preservation stems from her childhood in Hawkinsville, Ga., where her mother was continuously planting, conserving and preserving the natural products around her.

Miller, whose family has lived in Georgia for "many generations," graduated in 1953 from Hawkinsville High School. She then attended Middle Georgia Junior College and Georgia State College for Women to pursue a degree not in conservation, but teaching. Georgia State College for

"We're fast losing a lot of our natural resources and damaging our environment by carelessness and ignorance," said Johnnie Miller.

Women in Milledgeville, Ga., has since been renamed Georgia College at Milledgeville and Miller said "It's co-ed and growing all the time."

Miller graduated from college in the 1960's, but during the course of her college years, she met her future husband Donald Miller. "My older brother brought him home for the weekend," she said.

The Millers were married in 1958 and Miller took time off from school to give birth to two daughters. After teaching pre-school for a short time, Miller went back for her degree in elementary education. At the same time, her husband decided to go back to pharmacy school.

"I started teaching to help support the family," she said.

Throughout her teaching career, Miller has taught in Georgia, Hawaii, Virginia and Scotland in both private and public schools while her husband was in the Navy.

"I have taught pre-school all the way through eighth grade," she said. "I enjoy the open communication with the students and the parents."

It's been 11 years since Miller last taught, but she has kept busy ever since. She is the past president of the Area Council of Garden Clubs, with which she is still very active; and is on the executive board of the Virginia Beach Beautification Commission.

In the mid-1970's, the council of garden clubs decided to take the Francis Land House on as one of its projects. The city had just purchased the house and was contemplating what to do with it.

"We urged the city to open it up to the public and hire an administrator," Miller said.

The Francis Land House, formerly called Rose Hall, was built in 1732 by Captain Francis Land. According to Miller, it was a "working plantation farm up through the 1940's." It was then purchased and used as a very elegant dress shop until the early 1970's.

Miller said the purpose of the Friends of the Francis Land House is to "help sponsor events at the house to raise funds and make the community aware that it is there. Also to preserve it because of its historical significance."

The organization holds its meetings, special activities and tours at the house. Admission to the house is free and a tour guide donning 18th century period dress will meet visitors at the door and conduct the tour. Call for hours of operation.

Methadone May Not Be Best For Addicts

The city's Community Services Board has come up with a way to help the area's intravenous drug users. No, Virginia Beach will not set up its own methadone clinic, but it will try to use the services of Norfolk and Portsmouth's.

For those who don't know what exactly methadone is, it may not seem like a big deal. Methadone is a synthetic narcotic, although it doesn't provide the euphoric effect as do heroin and cocaine. Because it's a narcotic, methadone is addictive, as is heroin and cocaine. It doesn't make much sense to get a drug addict off of one drug and hooked on another.

Many drug abusers who seek help are admitted into the detoxification facility for a short-term detox program. The program lasts about four or five days. Many of the addicts either don't complete the whole program or go back to drugs when they get out.

So this is why methadone is so desperately needed? If an addict doesn't respond to the detoxification, methadone is used to replace the heroin. It just doesn't seem right. Is there no other way to help a drug addict kick the habit than to give him another drug?

So far, establishing a methadone clinic in Virginia Beach hasn't been required. Hopefully, the drug problem will not escalate so much that one will be needed. In a way, providing methadone to drug addicts is more like adding fuel to the fire instead of helping them.

If heroin or cocaine is not available to an addict, maybe methadone will be used in its place simply because the addict's body needs to have that narcotic. Methadone is supposedly a tool to get the addict to seek help. If abusers begin taking advantage of methadone, the joke will be on us. - K.L.D.

Guest May Lose Beach Votes

Virginia Beach will soon be voting for a new governor and it seems that one of the Republican candidates isn't too interested in capturing the votes of the State's most highly populated city.

State Delegate Raymond "Andy" Guest, a legislator from Front Royal, is focusing his strategy on seeking rural votes. Guest is also trailing behind his three other candidates with only three percent.

It's bad enough Guest obviously wants no part of the Virginia Beach votes, but to bad mouth Virginia Beach may get him nowhere. At a recent debate between the Republican candidates, Guest accused Virginia Beach of trying to take natural resources from the rural areas without compensation. The debate was held in rural Emporia, where Guest's comments drew rounds of applause. That's exactly what he is after. And that's where he belongs. He must not like sand between his toes.

Guest said he has always been opposed to the Lake Gaston project. Fine, but there is no need to accuse Virginia Beach of making a power play without proof to back himself up.

Virginia Beach, the state's largest metropolitan area, is in need of water. The one way they can get it is by tapping into Lake Gaston with a 95-mile pipeline. Brunswick County is the only location involved in the project that will not give its consent. Virginia Beach and Brunswick County now have one year to solve their differences over the project.

As Guest continued to ramble on about Virginia Beach's "high-handed efforts," he probably also continued to lose votes. Maybe Guest should have kept his opinions on Lake Gaston to himself, as did the other Republican candidates. - K.L.D.

Bus Auction Has Something For Us All

What would anyone want with a used school bus? You'd be surprised. Each year Virginia Beach Public Schools holds a - you guessed it - school bus auction. Believe it or not those school buses sell like hot cakes!

This year 21 buses will be up for auction. If buses aren't your thing, Dodge, Plymouth and Ford sedans, vans, pick-up trucks and walk-ins will also be available. The buses and cars will range in price from $200 to $1,600 depending on the highest bid. Where else can you get a car for dirt cheap?

Usually smaller school systems or privately-owned bus companies purchase the buses. It is not unusual to see a bus, painted a different color, on the road. Churches also show an interest in the buses because of their special activities.

Before you decide that there is nothing of interest to you at this auction, read on. Not only will buses be featured, but also an array of used office equipment, kitchen equipment, physical education equipment and hand tools. Anything from computers to dictaphones to garbage disposals will be right under your nose. And all for a low, low price.

Whether you're looking for a bus or a typewriter, you shouldn't miss this auction on April 22 at 9 a.m. at the Transportation Services Department.

Come early to inspect the merchandise. Then start bidding! K.L.D.

Hero Emerges As Feline Is Rescued

By Eric Shaffer
Special To The Sun

My daughter Kim has a cat, Bubbles, that is the apple of her eye and the worm in my apple of life. God could have convinced the Pharos to release the Jews without the plagues if he had sent this cat to live with him. However, recent events have endeared this misbegotten feline to me for because of her, I was given the opportunity to become a hero in my daughter's eyes.

Recently, this refugee from the animal shelter was chased up a hickory tree by an, as yet, unidentified dog. Upon escaping the dog, she became fearful and would not or could not come down in spite of my wife, who like my daughter, was convinced that the cat would stay in the tree until it died.

My son and I had both attempted to reassure the ladies that long before the cat died, hunger would cause it to fall out of the tree and that time was the answer to this crisis. Our humor fell upon deaf ears. So, with the eternal optimism of a man who doesn't know what he is getting into, I assured the distaff side of my household that I would get the cat down upon my return from work.

As I arrived home, the seriousness of the cat's plight became clearer to me as did the risk to my credibility this flea bag was causing. For once, again, that age-old problem of communications between the sexes was driven home as I discovered that 35 feet above the ground was merely up a tree to women. That height to me means that you need a new cat.

I found my daughter sitting under the tree comforting the cat and my son on the porch offering suggestions on how to get the cat down. Shooting it out of the tree seemed to be his first choice, while turning the garden hose on it ran a close second.

I, again, reassured my daughter that I could save the cat and drafted my son as an assistant for the upcoming ordeal. I went into the house to change clothes and underwear because to me there seemed to be a good chance that I would end up in the hospital. I could hear my mother saying that I should always have clean underwear on in case I went to the hospital.

After changing into clothes appropriate for the job, I called the most popular man in the neighborhood. You know him, the one with the 30-foot extension ladder. I asked to borrow it. Now armed with the most essential piece of rescue equipment, I placed it against the tree.

I knew the cat was 35 feet in the air because the ladder wouldn't reach her. One look at the reach involved in getting the cat convinced me that this was another "life experience" for my son. You know what a "life experience" is for a boy. It's something your father won't do but tells you to do to prepare for adulthood, or to improve your self confidence. Generally, all of these life experiences happen in my family 10 feet or more above the ground.

After swearing on my wedding ring that I wouldn't let go of the ladder, my son climbed to the top to recover the cat. What happened next is rather confusing, but the cat ended up inside my son's shirt either out of fear or retaliation for his suggestions earlier in the day. Moments later, my son returned to earth with the cat.

As this affair closed, I tallied the results. I had fulfilled a promise to my daughter, given my son a life experience, proven to my wife that I still had my wedding ring and changed my underwear, all courtesy of a cat.

Council Re-zoning Allows Access To Chesapeake Beach

By Lee Cahill
City Council Reporter

The city has finally written "the last chapter of its Ocean Park land adventure" by rezoning to Preservation District a number of parcels assuring the public open space and access to the Chesapeake Bay beach.

Well, almost.

Still unresolved is the ownership of the three parcels along Marlin Drive which developer Wayne McLeskey says he owns and has owned since 1971.

The contention, however, had no effect on council's rezoning action because the lots claimed by McLeskey were among eight excluded from the rezoning because they were parts of rights-of-way or areas below the low mean water line.

In all, 25 parcels had been considered, the major portion on the waterfront. Of these, the eight were excluded as well as parts of four others. The parcels were purchased from Edwin Lindsey Jr. after years of litigation and negotiation supported by area residents who wanted access to the beach as well as the open spaces which will not be provided throughout the subdivision.

While approving the rezoning council also directed City Attorney Dale Bimson to check into the McLeskey claims. The city wants to find out whether it paid for parcels it did not own. Councilman John D. Moss also wants to know what was paid and for what.

According to staff reports, the sites had been designated as parks, streets and reserved areas on the original Ocean Park subdivision plot recorded in 1917.

Council Approves Changes In The RV Ordinance

By Lee Cahill
City Council Reporter

City Council has approved some changes in its recreational vehicle (RV) ordinance but it was apparent that the problem is far from settled.

As many as 40 residents remained until close to midnight to hear the issue discussed before city council. Speakers generally were in favor of the amended ordinance but also wanted council to appoint a committee to study the whole problem.

Council adopted the ordinance unanimously and also agreed (by a vote of 9-2) to have a task force continue exploring the parking issue. Councilwoman Reba McClanahan and Councilman John L. Perry dissented.

Major elements of the ordinance were retained, such as the ban on parking of RV's on public streets or rights-of-way for more than three hours, or parking on residential lots except under certain conditions.

The ordinance, however, requires that temporary parking be entirely within a driveway (rather than "anywhere on the premises"), and changes the period allowing this from 12 to 24 hours.

RV owners who live on small lots have a problem meeting the requirements of the ordinance. The alternative is to pay for parking the vehicle on a commercial lot. Commercial storage, however, is not readily available although City Manager Aubrey V. Watts Jr., said that during the last several weeks he has discussed the issue with private business people interested in establishing a place for storage of the vehicles. Council had also looked into having the facilities established by the city.

McClanahan said that she still felt that the city has some duty to the people who are paying taxes if the RV's are not allowed in the driveways.

Arthur Goodwin, representing the Virginia Beach RV and Boat Owners Association and other interested organizations, had requested a committee as well as a moratorium of 90 days on the ordinance.

Les Fenlon, chairman of the Great Neck Association of Civic Leagues, supported the ordinance, as did Martin Shuman, representing the Cape Henry Shores Civic Association.

Mayor Meyera Obermeyer, at the request of council members, will appoint the committee.

Economic Development's Successful De Bellis Retires

The Mayor's Report
Virginia Beach Mayor
The Honorable
Meyera Oberndorf

Economic Development has come a long way since Jim De Bellis was hired in 1970 to serve as the city's first director of that brand new department.

His first budget in 1970 totalled $468,097 to support the effort of De Bellis and a staff of three. Fully 60 percent of those dollars were earmarked for tourist advertising and operation of the city's small convention center.

The first order of business was infrastructure design and development of 202-acre Airport Industrial Park. By 1975, the park was fully occupied.

In 1971, land costs in Virginia Beach were growing at a phenomenal rate. It became evident there was a need to reserve as much land as possible for a future industrial park to help balance and expand the tax base and provide job opportunities - a land banking program.

Growth corridors and locations that had potential for industrial parks were studied. The area chosen was adjacent to Oceana Naval Air Station. The 1,000 acres of land was mostly open and drained through a series of established canals. The master transportation plan had projected a four-lane highway which now bisects the property and interconnects with the Virginia Beach-Norfolk Expressway and the Interstate System. In addition, there were major utility support systems planned for the area.

Having the major infrastructure either in place or planned for, the next objective was to secure the land. Residential development which was taking place in the areas surrounding the site was selling in 1972 for approximately $3,000 an acre. In order to purchase 1,000 acres in fee, it would have cost the city over $3,000,000. An expenditure of this amount in tax dollars was prohibitive, so De Bellis developed a plan which would not require any cash outlay from tax funds. He had numerous meetings with the eight property owners involved and finally agreed to option the property, double their initial price per acre, and over a period of seven years, add 10 percent each year to the base price to allow for land value appreciation. If after the initial seven-year agreement the options were not renewed, the off-site improvements would accrue to the property owner which in effect was their consideration for entering into the contract and taking their property off market. To make it legal, for each parcel optioned, the city paid $1.

If you ask Jim De Bellis, he will be the first to say "It was a team effort." But a team needs a leader.

The measure of success which this program received is directly responsible to the attitude and negotiations in good faith between De Bellis and the farmers who owned the property. In addition to receiving market

April Marked As Child Abuse Prevention Month

The VBEA Report
By Clair Polley,
President of the Virginia
Beach Education Association

This week's article was written by Cheryl Tokaz, VBEA vice president.
The month of April, like all other months, will be marked with several observances. Besides marking many religious observances, it will also mark the observance of something that should be significant to everyone regardless of their involvement with children. April is Child Abuse Prevention Month.

We have all been made well aware of the tragedy of child abuse. The media has repeatedly reported stories of abuse that to most of us seems almost unbelievable. Unfortunately for the children, public knowledge and its resulting outcry has come too late to save them. The recent trial in New York City only stands as a sad testament to that fact.

What we must realize is that abuse of children takes on many forms. It is not restricted solely to the observable bruises and broken bones, but rather can and often is, the unobservable. Mental abuse of children can be as devastating. The sad part is that because we do not "see" the results of mental abuse immediately, it often goes unreported and even worse, is untreated.

In the years that I have been involved in public education, I have probably seen more cases of mental abuse of children than physical abuse. It is also the most difficult to prove and thus the most difficult to be remedied.

It is not restricted solely to the observable bruises and broken bones, but rather can and often is, the unobservable.

As educators, we see the attempts to teach children how to read and write often has to take second place to spending time with the child just trying to get them to feel better about themselves. Then, and only then, would the child be in a frame of mind that would be receptive to learning. Children are like any other human beings in that if things are not going well in their lives, little else matters. The ability to reason and glean and process information becomes less important to the goal of just surviving.

For many other children, school becomes their only solace; their teacher becomes their confidant and surrogate parent and strong bonds are created. It is extremely difficult as an adult to let go of a child who is in that situation. Often reporting such children to public agencies if unsuccessful and thus even more frustrating. Without observable proof, we are told little can be done. We can see the fear in their eyes when we tell them that if they continue to behave in an inappropriate way or if they continue to not turn in assignments, their parents will be contacted. We know

Protecting And Caring For Unfortunate Abused Children

From Lillian Youell

The local print media have recently illuminated a dark side of our society. Child-abuse and child-neglect cases in our own and neighboring communities have taken front page coverage and graphic headlines. Stories of torture, maiming and killing of innocent, helpless children are beyond comprehension.

Whose emotions were not wrenched by the tragic story of the little three-year old boy whose battered body was stuffed into an old toolbox and dumped in a nearby swamp? Will his sister ever recover from emotional abuse - fear and trauma, even if she recovers from her own physical abuse - a burned hand and a leg broken in four places?

It was only in 1962 that Dr. C. Henry Kempe, professor of pediatrics at the University of Colorado, coined the term "battered-child syndrome" to describe the cases he had been observing. His article, published that year in the "Journal of the American Medical Society," on the physical abuse of children by their parents, attracted national attention as it was the first objective, scholarly treatment of the subject.

Twelve years went by before important legislation and the first of its kind to be national in scope was passed, establishing the National Center on Child Abuse and Neglect. Sponsored by then Senator Walter F. Mondale, this Act defined the now familiar term "child abuse and neglect" as

"The physical or mental injury, sexual abuse, negligent treatment or maltreatment of a child under the age of eighteen by a person who is responsible for the child's welfare under circumstances which indicate that the child's health or welfare is harmed or threatened thereby."

Deeply concerned about the nation's troubled children, President Jimmy Carter in 1979 called a White House Conference on Families. This was an attempt to learn what had happened to families in America as a result of the broad social and economic changes that had taken place. The chief concerns then were family breakups, runaway children and the generation gap.

A decade has passed since that Conference and the situation is worse, not better. Again, the great breakdown is in the family itself. This past year, the nation was shocked to learn of the physical and psychological brutality which led to the death of little Lisa Steinberg of New York. Then a survey on "intimate violence" found more disturbing trends.

At least 1,200 children die each year through child abuse and neglect.

Lee Cahill's City Council Report

Council To Pay $245,000 For Growth Management Plan

City council has agreed to pay consultants up to $245,000 for a growth management plan for the southern part of the city.

In a 10-1 vote with only Councilwoman Reba McClanahan dissenting, council decided to extend the contract of consulting firms presently under contract to recommend a growth management program for the areas south of the green line.

The study, which will be made by Rogers, Golden and Halpern in association with Siemon, Larsen and Purdy will include an update of the comprehensive plan for the areas below the Green Line, something which the city has never had, according to Councilman John A. Baum. He said that the city has never had a comprehensive plan for the southern end of the city except that it should remain agricultural.

Although several southern end residents opposed to spending money on a consultant and asked that the people who live in the area be allowed to make the decisions, the Virginia Beach Farm Bureau supported the proposal.

Councilman John D. Moss conceded that some risk accompanied the expenditure, but, he said it was "worth the gamble." He said that while the cost was substantial, it was not when compared with the $300 million which would be needed for capital improvements in the southern end of the city if growth were to continue as it has been. He said that the city needs more technical information and that while the staff may have the ability to provide it, the work would take time away from everyday business of the city.

Baum explained that the city also needs more information because the General Assembly, in considering a transferable development rights program for the city had requested more study. Baum said there are conflicts between agriculture and rapid growth. "All we're asking is to get hold of these things." He said that what has happened in the southern end of the city has not been all bad, but "I don't think we should give away prematurely a natural resource."

Councilman Harold Heischouer pointed out that not all the $245,000 may be spent because existing data and analysis prepared by the staff and other consultants will be used. He said that council made a conscious decision to adopt the Green Line and to adopt a program of catching up with improvements in the northern end of the city, but not in the south. "With what is happening (in the southern end of the city) we need to redirect our thinking." The intent is to come up with a growth plan that is compatible while using the objectivity of professionalism. The public, he said, will have a part in the ultimate plan that will be adopted.

Gene Daniel, president of the Virginia Beach Farm Bureau, said that the board of directors, made up of small and large farmers and large landowners, voted in favor of the study. He said the southern part of the city is vital and important to the whole city. He said that he is one of those people who does not believe in spending money unnecessarily, but that $245,000 is a small amount to spend to find the best use for the area. From most of the comments he has heard, he said, he believes the people do not understand. The study would make it easier to understand.

McClanahan would have the plan for the southern end included with the five-year update of the Comprehensive Plan. She said that handling the reevaluation differently, with a special study of the southern end, gives her a lot of problems. She also said that she did not think fair the possibility that the education program coming out of the study would present just one side, using taxpayers' money. She said she wanted to include the pros and cons. She said that the real problem is turning over something of this magnitude to consultants and if council can't accept the results, the expenditure would be a waste of money. She said that the city had a number of studies; "this process can take years."

Moss said he expected that the city would have the same policy in an educational campaign involving this program as it does with other educational campaigns, to present a balanced picture.

Council had requested the General Assembly for authority to adopt a program of transferred development rights (TDR) for the city. The Assembly instead asked for more information. The study will provide that information.

In addition to pursuing TDR, the council is also directing the consultant to study the purchase of development rights (PDR). Mayor Meyera Oberndorf has supported PDR as a way of guaranteeing perpetuity for a plan for the southern end of the city. The city, perhaps, would purchase development rights in perpetuity. The TDR plan would provide for the transfer of development rights from the rural areas to areas more appropriate for development. However, under the proposal, the property owner's development rights would be restored after 25 years.

In addition to an update of the Comprehensive Plan, the study would also include:

- An economic and fiscal impact assessment of the TDR and PDR.
- A refined transferable TDR ordinance.
- Additional factual and legal support
- A public information and education program.
- Interim regulations.

Those who opposed the expenditure, said that it is not true that everyone down there wants residential and commercial growth. But, she said, she did not want to see the area "dry up." She said she wanted slow growth but that stopping growth will hurt business.

Marvin Robbins, of 1521 Mill

End Road, a builder who has always lived in Back Bay, wants to continue building and to have his son become a builder after him. "When we have a consulting firm they don't understand the feelings of people. People of the community should have some say in their destiny, not just a consulting firm. We don't want a tug of war with city council but people are tired of being told what to do."

Joe Burroughs asked that citizens be allowed to form a committee and get a consultant of their choice who has had a little background in agriculture and development.

Al Henley wanted council to allow the Pungo/Back Bay Civic League to establish a task force to find a workable solution.

Bert Dall said people living there are cheaper than a consultant.

Pungo Councilwoman Barbara Henley said that the city routinely hires consultants. "We contract our roads, sewer, water. We contract engineers for a master road plan. She said that from the experience the city has had with the consultants, "these people are very anxious to know what the community wants." I hope what we have is what our speakers want."

Mayor Meyera Oberndorf said that if council had come up with a similar study for the north end 20 years ago, the city may have been developed differently. With the study area including a third of the city, she said, "it's like creating another whole community."

Council Requests Declaring That Sandbridge Is A Disaster Area

City council is requesting Governor Gerald Baliles to declare Sandbridge a disaster area as a result of a succession of "northeast" storms over the past several weeks. Approximately $800,000 damage was done to private property, in addition to severe damage to recently constructed bulkheads. Also, approximately $2.5 million worth of sand was lost due to erosion, and because of the sea depth off Sandbridge, is probably lost from the beach system completely.

Once the State government declares Sandbridge a disaster area, the federal government will be requested to declare it a federal disaster which will make the property owners eligible for low interest loans and other federal assistance.

The resolution, presented by Councilwoman Reba McClanahan and adopted unanimously by council, requests that the governor declare Sandbridge a major natural disaster area and to forward his declaration to the federal government.

Peking Dancers Perform At Pavilion

The Peking Acrobats will appear on Tuesday, April 4 at 8 p.m. in the Virginia Beach Pavilion Theater.

The performance is sponsored by the Tidewater Community College Student Government Association and the Virginia Beach Arts and Humanities Commission.

Because of the unusual and difficult nature of the feats involved, high honor is conferred upon those skilled enough to become acrobats. For centuries, dating back to the Ch'in Dynasty (225 -207 B.C.), Chinese acrobats have continued to perfect this evolving folk art form. Tradition demands that each generation of acrobats add its own innovations and embellishments.

Since the Peking Acrobatic Troupe was founded in 1961, traditional acrobatic techniques have been integrated with the varied disciplines of ballet, Chinese opera and gymnastics and have thus contributed to a much enriched and yet entirely indicative Chinese Art form.

Items like "The Poses of the Flying Fairies," "Balancing Bowls on Unicycles," and "Hand Feats" carry their own particular flavor by combining the acrobatic skills of the Southern and the Northern provinces, and have thrilled audiences throughout the world.

The young acrobats of the Peking Troupe are meticulously trained over many years and are amongst the most highly skilled professionals in their field anywhere in the world.

Tickets for their April 4 performance are $6.50. They may be purchased at the Pavilion Theater promenade and embellishments.

Council Of Block Mothers Meets

The Tidewater Council of Block Mothers will meet at the Virginia Beach Central Library, meeting Room B, on Wednesday, May 17, from 7:30 to 9 p.m. Anyone interested in the organization is welcome to attend.

Block Mothers was started in 1967 by a group of mothers in Arrowhead. The purpose of Block Mothers is to provide a safe, convenient telephone link for children in an emergency.

Block Mothers is a non-profit, all-volunteer community organization made up of mothers who are concerned about the safety of all children. All applicants undergo a screening process with the help of the Virginia Beach Police Department. Following approval, the Block Mother receives a sign to put in her window whenever she is home.

Block Mothers also supports programs which teach safety skills to children and programs that teach children the meaning of the Block Mothers sign. There are currently 24 schools with Block Mothers in Virginia Beach. The organization's goal is to have the program in every public elementary school.

The Block Mothers program is endorsed by division school superintendent, Dr. James E. Melvin, and the city police department. A Block Mothers sign is featured in the police department's "Escape" program. Block Mothers representatives are active on both the Virginia Beach Crime Prevention Steering Committee and the Virginia Beach Multi-Discipline Team for the Prevention of Child Abuse.

Bayside, Cox Name Football Coaches

William W. King, Jr., and James F. Prince have been selected as head football coaches at Bayside High School and Frank W. Cox High School, respectively.

King will succeed Kenneth S. Barto, who will become the head football coach at Salem High School when it opens next fall. Prince will succeed Thomas W. Rhodes, who will move to his alma mater, Great Bridge High School in Chesapeake. Both appointments are effective July 1, 1989.

King now works at Green Run High School as in-school suspension coordinator, assistant football coach for receivers and defensive line, strength coach, and assistant track coach. Before coming to Virginia Beach last year, he was a graduate assistant football coach at The Citadel in Charleston, S.C. He was responsible for coaching the wishbone tight ends and offensive line. In 1986 he served as a part-time assistant coach (veer tight ends) at Carson Newman College in Tennessee. He has also been an assistant football coach at Marietta High School, Marietta, Ga., and at Northside High School in Roanoke, Va.

A Radford native, King holds a bachelor of science degree in physical education from Virginia Tech and a master of science degree in physical education from the University of Tennessee.

Prince comes to Virginia Beach from duties as an assistant football coach and administrative assistant at James Madison University in Harrisonburg, Va. Prince has been at James Madison since 1975; during that time he has served as receiver coach (current), offensive co-ordinator, defensive secondary coach, and head wrestling coach. In 1972 he was the receiver coach at Shepherd College, Shepherdstown, W. Va.

A native of Eastern Shore, Prince earned a bachelor's degree in physical education from Shepherd College and a master of science degree from James Madison University.

Bayside Students Participate In Museum's Residency Program

Jason Bilger, 17, son of Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Bilger and Holly Japs, 16, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Herbert D. Also participating was Cookie Greene, a teacher at Bayside High. They were sponsored by the Virginia Beach Arts Center, an affiliate of the Virginia Museum.

The theme this year was "Dare to be Different," challenging participants to explore innovations in the arts. Students discovered how many ideas now considered old-fashioned were once thought shocking and were taken "behind the scenes" at the museum, where arts professionals showed them that new materials and techniques are providing solutions to old problems.

Mary Wayne Fritzsche, manager of the museum's education and outreach division, says participants also attended workshops conducted by artists and performers. Other events included an evening at the theatre and tours of artists' exhibitions at local galleries.

Special To The Sun

Luba Gulyaeva, former soloist of the Kirov Ballet, was in Virginia Beach recently at The Ballet Studio, giving classes in the Kirov technique. The director of the Ballet Studio, Russian-born Irina Vassiliera Wohner, whose uncle, L. Vassilie, is still with the Kirov, invited Gulyaeva here from her classes in New York where she teaches six days a week for Mikhail Barishnikov. Barishnikov is forming a new school in the Kirov-style in New York City.

In addition to Gulyaeva's teaching duties, she also is traveling the nation, holding auditions for the 15 boys and 15 girls who will be accepted into the school of which Gulyaeva is director.

Wohner's students welcomed Gulyaeva by showing her how they have learned to count their ballet music in Russian, a requirement of Wohner's studio. Ashlyn Brooks followed a European tradition and presented Gulyaeva with flowers. Angelique Moers and Kim Tapper will be spending the summer in studies in New York and Michigan with Gulyaeva.

Some form of violence occurs in one-fourth of all marriages. More than 2,000,000 cases of child abuse were reported in 1986, compared with 669,000 in 1976.

Dr. Hendrick B. Cantwell, pediatrician and expert on child abuse, in a talk to the American Lawyers Auxiliary in Denver, stated that the problem is a societal one and that the time has come to define the duties of parents, for too many have abandoned their roles and responsibilities.

An early chronicler of English Law, Chancellor Kent said: "The rights of parents result from their duties. As they are bound to maintain and educate their children, the law has given them a right to such authority, and, in the support of that authority, a right to the exercise of such discipline as may be requisite for the discharge of their sacred trust. This is the true foundation of parental power."

Dr. Cantwell spoke of the great need for early intervention in cases of sexual abuse. She maintains that such abuse is like a disease as it is passed along. Behavior of children is learned from adults or older children. Imitation is a learning process. Those who are sexually abused act it out as normal behavior. Then it spreads like an infection. Thus, she estimates that each perpetrator will be responsible for as many as 10 to 600 victims in his lifetime.

In her opinion, pornography is only a symptom not a cause of the large number of sexual abuse cases. She reported that the major sexual abuser is the father. Next, a stepfather or boyfriend. Therefore, teaching children to fear strangers will not protect the majority of the abused.

In speaking with a little girl who had been abused, Dr. Cantwell asked, "Who is a stranger?" Quickly the child replied, "A man with a mustache." It seems that the mother had pointed out a man with a mustache when she cautioned the child not to speak to strangers. In the child's mind, she had nothing to fear from anyone else.

Just a few weeks ago, the United States Supreme Court heard the case of a four-year-old boy, Joshua DeShaney, whose beatings by his father had left him severely brain-damaged. The court ruled that although the case was undeniably tragic, the county welfare officials could not be sued for violating the rights of the boy. The court explained that the Constitution was devised to protect us from government intrusion, not to force the government to protect us from each other!

Chief Justice Rehnquist, writing for the majority, said, "Nothing in the language of the due process clause itself requires the state to protect the life, liberty and property of its citizens against invasion by private actors. Because the state had no constitutional duty to protect Joshua against his father's violence, its failure to do so - though calamitous in hindsight - simply does not constitute a violation of the due process clause."

The Chief Justice continued, "While public officials can be sued for denying a person's right to free speech or breaking down a home's door without a search warrant, they cannot be sued for failing to act."

Dr. Cantwell states, "The agencies should be held responsible for checking on children when a report is made. They are, by law, appointed to investigate allegations of child abuse or neglect. However, children can not be supervised by an agency 24-hours-a-day. The law is explicit that children should be reunited with parents and the burden of proof, why not, is often difficult for social services and evaluators."

In his dissent, Justice Harry A. Blackmun wrote, "My disagreement with the court arises from its failure to see that inaction can be every bit as abusive of power as action, that oppression can result when a state undertakes a vital duty and then ignores it."

This decision made me wonder who would protect a child when his abuser is the very person whose "sacred trust" is to shield him from abuse. I was relieved to find information and assistance readily available in Virginia Beach. A brochure in the library describes how to find a "Safe Place," such as Seton House, telephone 498-4673. The Child Abuse Hotline is toll-free: 1-800-552-7096 and is answered 24 hours a day, seven days a week.

Another brochure, "Child Protective Services in Virginia," reviews the 1974 Virginia Child Abuse and Neglect Act and explains the responsibilities of parents and the community. To contact our city's Social Service Agency, telephone 486-7223.

something is wrong. Because we know our children so well we, and often, no one else, can see the scars on their hearts.

We live in a time when the pressures on families are enormous. While one cannot excuse the adults who, for one reason or another, become child abusers, issues of society often cause increased frustration for adults who find their "outlet" in either abuse of their spouse or their children. We do not live in an idyllic society which is free from frustration related to job, finances and marital stresses; but to take these frustrations out on our children is inexcusable. There are a myriad of agencies which would gladly provide the support which individuals and families need in order to survive the stresses of living. But no one can help if the individual does not take the first step and seek out the help. One should not be concerned about what friends and neighbors will think about them if they "admit" defeat and seek assistance. I would rather be known as an individual who realizes the need for help and seeks it than as one who allows myself to become involved in a vicious cycle of mental and/or physical abuse of children.

as a newspaper is relevant to your life, you'll read it."

Making reference to the Bush/Dukakis race for the presidency, Shieffer said, "The longest and most expensive campaign in history was, I thought, the most shallow. We find ourselves instead of enlightened (by campaign advertising), numb."

The Texas native enjoyed his first taste of Virginia Beach. "It's great," said Shieffer. "I love it here." The 20-year CBS veteran also had the opportunity to enjoy a taste of sea food during his brief visit. "I had a great seafood dinner before I came over," said Shieffer. "I had flounder over at the Ramada Inn."

As a correspondent for CBS, Shieffer has covered several political conventions and presidential campaigns. He has won two Emmy Awards and an Overseas Press Club Award and has anchored a variety of news specials including Anwar Sadat's historic visit to Israel in 1977.

The purpose of the series, sponsored by the city's public libraries, public schools and Tidewater Community College is to promote the humanities, according to Martha J. Sims, library system director.

"We usually keep a school bus for 12 to 13 years. We get our money's worth out of these buses," said Fullerton.

Pace said, depending on the condition, buses may be auctioned off for $200 to $1,600. The larger buses usually sell for $450 to $500 and the shorter buses can go for $1,200 to $1,600. Last year the school board made $29,000 on school buses and cars.

"We don't want to make them so dirt cheap that someone can walk away with a fleet of them," Fullerton said.

The school board also has a fleet of cars and trucks for sale. Ten Dodge, Plymouth and Ford Sedans, 1974 to 1981 models, and a combination of 12 vans, walk-ins, and pick-up trucks will also be featured at the auction. Sixty-four wheels and tires used for portable schools are also available.

The vehicles, usually bought by smaller school systems and private bus companies such as Eddie Eubank, are not the only auctionable items. Typewriters, adding machines, calculators, old copiers, computers and miscellaneous office equipment such as dictaphones and vision testers can be purchased.

"These are all unsuitable for school use or obsolete," Fullerton said.

But the list of old, beyond repair equipment goes on. Kitchen scales, grinders, slicers and garbage disposals, hand tools, which are "mostly parts," and physical education equipment "unsafe for school use" can also be bought.

"We've probably had them for a while," Fullerton said of the balance beam, rings, trampoline and vaulting box. "You've got to make sure students aren't going to get hurt on it."

Fullerton said all the equipment is sold as is and will go to the highest bidder. According to Pace, $5,084 worth of equipment was sold last year.

"We usually sell everything," he said. "Nothing remains."

The proceeds from the auction are placed back into the school board's general operating fund and counted as a source of revenue for the school division. The division then pays for any new buses needed, as they are programmed into the budget.

Those interested in attending the auction may view the items the week before the auction, by appointment only. To schedule an appointment, contact Chester Sorey at 425-3500. Buses and equipment are also available for inspection the morning before the auction.

"You've got a whole choice of things here," Fullerton said.

Cats

"Some breeders will sell you a cat with the agreement it will be spayed or neutered," she said.

According to Staff, both national and regional award winning cats will be on exhibit. When cats enter shows, they are judged against other cats, the best ten receiving the highest points. At the end of one year, the cat's points from all its shows are added up, possibly qualifying it for a regional show. Cats that rank high in the regional show usually go on to national shows.

When being judged, cats are divided into categories, such as household pets and purebreds. Household pets are judged strictly on personality, condition, beauty and pet quality. Purebreds, on the other hand, are judged according to the set of standards set up by the breeders. For example, a Persian cat should have short legs and a short fat body, where a Siamese should have long legs and a long body.

Staff said the cats for sale could range in price from $150 to over $1,000 for a cat such as the Sphinx, a hairless cat from France.

"They're extremely rare," she added.

The cats will also range in size, the smallest being a four-pound Siamese and the largest being a 19-pound Maine Coon cat.

The cat show will also feature vendors selling special cat products and supplies. One vendor will be introducing a new brand of cat litter and cat cross stitching and stationery will be on hand.

"There will be anything from beds to litter pans to brushes to leashes," Staff said.

Staff said the show normally raises thousands of dollars, although last year less than $500 was raised.

All proceeds from the show go to Cornell University for the research of cat diseases. Admission to the show is $3; senior citizens and children pay $2.

Inventory

Waugh said of the Heritage Program.

Waugh said the reasoning behind choosing Seashore State Park for inventory is because it is located in the midst of Virginia's largest, metropolitan area. Currently, the 2,770-acre park and natural area is one of the most biologically and ecologically significant areas in the Commonwealth.

There are several plant species that are only found at Seashore State Park. Twenty-four of the 470 plant species are listed as rare. Five vertebrates known to inhabit the natural area, including the Eastern Chicken Turtle, the Red-Headed Woodpecker, Swamp Fish, Mud Sunfish and the Carpenter Frog, are also identified as rare, along with the dune areas and the Bald Cypress trees.

"That's another reason why Seashore is so unique," Waugh said.

Seashore State Park, which attracts one million visitors each year, is the home of rare biological communities such as the Interdunal

Ponds, low Maritime and Maritime Shrub Forests. The park is facing pressures from the human community, though.

"We need to know what the plant and animal needs are so we can protect them and balance them with the human community needs," Waugh said.

He said several negative impacts on the area have caused the Division of State Parks to change their management policies. For instance, Jerry Boceri's annual Shamrock Marathon is no longer allowed to detour through the park.

"You have those pressures," Waugh said. "I don't think there's been any irreversible damages."

price in their undeveloped property, the owners continued to farm the land, live in their homes and receive their money as sales were made over a period of time minimizing their capital gains.

Today, the 1,000 acre Oceana West Industrial Park is 85 percent developed. It sits squarely in the center of our city's population of almost 400,000. Some 4,800 citizens are employed in 215 companies including Suhl, Inc., Regal Appliances, Hermes Abrasives, Lillian Vernon, a regional post office and the largest shopping mall between Washington and Atlanta. The current value of land and buildings totals $83,700,345.

Obviously, one of the first land banking efforts in the country for municipal economic development has been extremely successful.

De Bellis' second major program involved the proposal, justification, approval, acceptance, construction, staffing and operation of a first class convention center for Virginia Beach. The 10,000 square-foot Civic Center was obviously too small to handle major conventions. To expand the Virginia Beach tourist season, and provide an arena for local programs, De Bellis was convinced that a major, multipurpose facility was required.

In 1975, he and his staff began the effort that would result in 1980 with the opening of Pavilion, the Virginia Beach Convention Center. The public assembly facility's exhibition hall with 63,000 sq. ft. will seat 9,000 for a conference of 5,000 for a banquet. The adjacent theatre with permanent seating for 1,000 features a full stage, hydraulic orchestra pit, rehearsal area, scenery shop and dressing rooms.

In 1988, Pavilion and the Civic Center hosted 829 separate events with $74,900 patrons, and was used for everything from trade shows, boxing matches, dinner dances and flea markets to ballet and symphony concerts.

De Bellis' stewardship has been eventful and successful. The Department of Economic Development Annual report for 1971 listed 102 events in the Civic Center with attendance of 175,000, including six conventions. Industrial activity included the sale of two parcels of land valued at $161,000.

Through 1988:

1,248 acres of land have been sold; 637 major new businesses moved to Virginia Beach; $227,298,675 was invested in industrial land and buildings; 11,205 new jobs were created; 37,461,700 tourists visited and spent $3,587,040,000; 313 conventions were held with 723,050 delegates and $48,865,000 was generated in tax revenue.

If you ask Jim De Bellis, he will be the first to say "It was a team effort." But a team needs a leader - and the leader must have vision, and tenacity, and political acumen. The Virginia Beach team has had all that and more in Jim De Bellis.

about the families that lived there and 18th century life," Miller said.

Miller said she would like to see more historical preservation in Virginia Beach, as well as more beautification projects, such as putting more effort into tree protection.

take a look at the I.V. drug user populations," Balok said.

The project's goal is to contract with methadone clinics in Norfolk and Portsmouth. Balok said they will ask the clinics to submit a bid on how much their services would be. As a method of detoxification, a physician will evaluate the addict to determine the methadone dosage that will best help him to kick the drug abuse habit. The staff will then stabilize the addict on the methadone to prevent him from leading the same kind of self-destructive lifestyle.

"It replaces the receptor sites where a narcotic would normally go," Balok said of the methadone.

Methadone, which is a non-euphoric synthetic narcotic, is a more highly controlled substance compared to heroin or cocaine, although it is addictive. Since it is an oral medication, Balok said methadone is used as a tool to get the client to seek help. She said it's hard to get drug abusers to stay in treatment.

At the detoxification facility, located on Virginia Beach Boulevard by the Open Door Chapel, Balok said 61 clients have been treated in the outpatient program. The short-term detoxification lasts four or five days with added treatment following. But many addicts go back to their old ways even after the treatment.

Balok said the methadone treatment project will be small-scaled and selective. The money allotted by the state will only serve six heroin abusers.

Balok said the methadone treatment project will be small-scaled and selective. The money allotted by the state will only serve six heroin abusers, although Balok said it may be less than that. She said addicts will be put through detoxification first before turning to the methadone.

"It's not going to be for everybody," she said. "We're looking at a 180-day detox."

Balok said it is not the city's interest right now to establish its own methadone clinic. She said if contracting with Norfolk and Portsmouth works out, Virginia Beach may not require a clinic, although it is being evaluated very closely.

"It's a very expensive program," she said. "It's too early to see if we need it."
